U. S. NAVY HOUNDS JAP FLEET

REMEMBER PEARL HARBOR?---

Then Don't Forget Heroism Of U. S. Navy Fighters During Surprise Attack

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON—Remember Pearl Harbor?

Then remember a battleship captain, his stomach torn open by a shrapnel burst, fight his ship from the bridge until he died on the deck.

Remember a rookie gob who jumped to a machine gun before the first alarm sounded and blasted a torpedo plane as it levelled against his ship.

Remember the sailors from disabled ships who swam through blazing oil to get on outward bound destroyers to make sure they'd get back into battle.

Remember the lone Bluejacket who manned a five-inch anti-aircraft gun and kept it firing after ten battery mates had been shot down in a strafing attack.

These men and their mates saw Pearl Harbor through, saw the navy through what Navy Secretary Knox calls its "gravest hour of peril."

Knox told part of their story in his report yesterday—no one probably will ever be able to tell it all—and it was a story of heroism, sacrifice and courage of which, as Knox said, "the American nation may well be proud."

The portion of the fleet in Pearl Harbor had been caught flat footed by the treacherous Japanese attacks. Hardly had the keen-eyed watchers on the navy yard signal tower sent out warnings of the approaching raiders when the high explosives and incendiaries began to rain down. Torpedo planes darted low to drop their deadly tin fish. There was fire, flame, explosions — a Danteesque scene as oil-coated harbor water ignited and billowed up.

The words of the official report only hint at the stark drama of valor and discipline as the fighting men and the fighting ships recovered to meet the surprise onslaught.

There were tremendous moments

"With the ship (an aircraft tender) already on fire from repeated high altitude attacks, her anti-aircraft batteries downed a plane which crashed in flames on her deck. At this moment her captain observed the shadow of an enemy two-man submarine approaching within a few yards. . . . Hits were scored immediately. . . . The tender then shot a second plane. . . ."

"On a submarine base dock a Bluejacket, carrying a heavy machine gun for which there was no mount immediately available, shot the weapon from his arms, staggering under the concussion of the rapid fire. . . .

"One seaman had been confined to his battleship's brig for misconduct a few days earlier. When an explosion tore open the door,

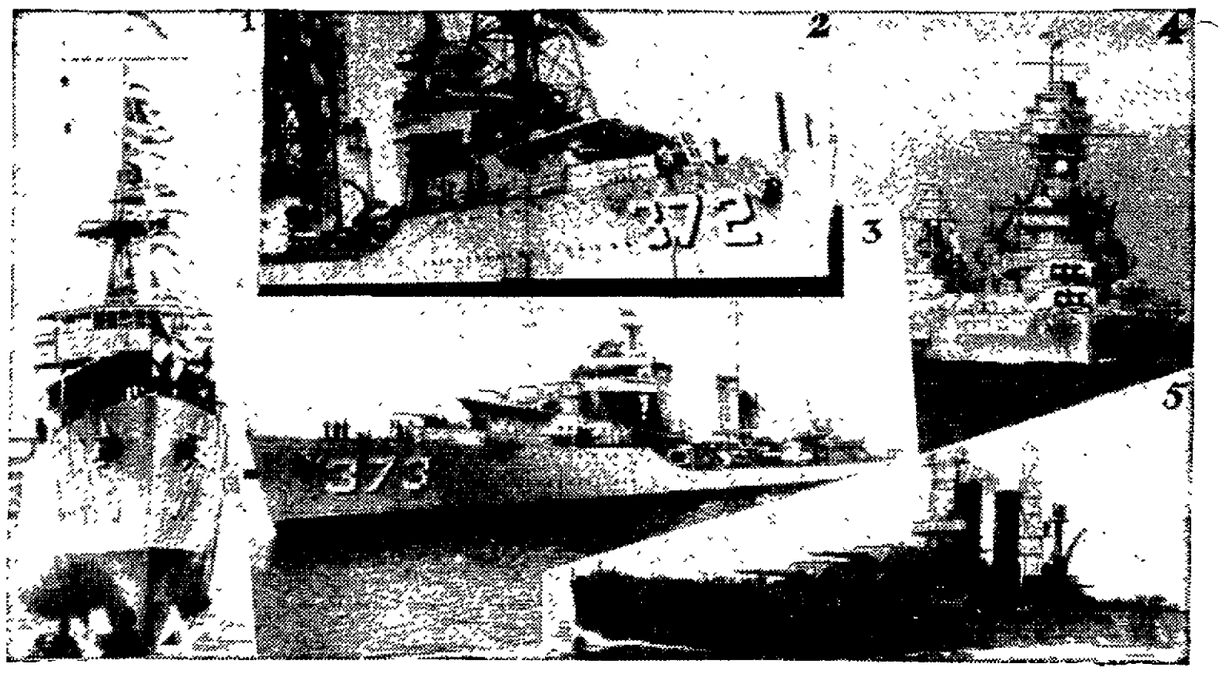
Here Are the Ships We Lost When Japs Attacked Navy Base



Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, after returning from his inspection flight to Hawaii, revealed that the losses sustained by the U. S. Pacific fleet during the Japanese surprise attack on Pearl Harbor were three 1,500-ton destroyers (1) Downes (2) Cassin and (3) Shaw, all completed in 1937. The 32,600-ton battleship (4) Arizona and (5) the 19,800-ton target ship Utah. The Knox statement gave direct lie to Japanese statements that an aircraft carrier and other big warships had been sunk and that only "remnants" of the U. S. Pacific fleet remained intact.

Knox Discloses U. S. Losses In Hawaii; Senators Urge Relief For Midway, Wake Defenders; Philippines Stand Off Enemy.

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON — (AP) — President Roosevelt was reported reliably today to have urged the senate military committee to reduce the selective service minimum age to 19 and thus bring 2,400,000 additional men under the draft registration.

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The war department announced today that army bombers had renewed their attacks on Japanese vessels off Legaspi on the Island of Luzon in the Philippines, seriously damaging an enemy transport.

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON—The United States battle fleet, wearing the scars of Pearl Harbor but in formidable fighting strength despite its losses, hunted the vastness of the Pacific today for the Japanese fleet—and vengeance.

The orders, in traditional navy phrasing, were: "Seek out the enemy and destroy him."

The grievous story of Pearl Harbor had been told—a story that disclosed a fatal lack of vigilance, but a story, too, of epic drama, gallantry and plain fighting guts. And that official account gave some hint of the heavy score the navy was out to repay.

With two forces the navy sought to learn the enemy's whereabouts and dispositions. The main Pacific battle fleet, under command of Admiral Husband E. Kimmel, presumably was operating west of Hawaii. The smaller Asiatic fleet, which takes its orders from peppery Admiral Thomas C. Hart, ranged the South China sea, looking for the Japanese squadron which got away once under cover of darkness.

The capital realized, however, that it might be days, weeks, or even months before the electrifying words — "action joined"— flashed from the fleet. The military situation was of more immediate concern, although it failed to displace the navy's official report on Pearl Harbor as the No. 1 discussion topic.

The stout-hearted defenders of Wake and Midway continued first in the hearts of their countrymen, and several senators urged that some effort be made to relieve the marines who have been battling off repeated Japanese attacks on the two tiny island outposts.

The situation in the Philippines appeared substantially unchanged, with the Japanese landing forces still holding three widely separated beachheads on the main Island of Luzon. Enemy raids were reported on the Olongapo naval base, near Manila, and on Nichols field.

As for the report of Secretary of Navy Knox on Pearl Harbor's "bloody Sunday," the reaction of official and unofficial Washington was generally one of relief. Capitol Hill, which has buzzed for days with horrendous reports that had most of the fleet wiped out, expressed satisfaction that the losses were not too great.

There was unsparing criticism,

British Smash 70 Miles West of Tobruk

All Nazi Tanks Trapped, Claim

Russians Also Sweep Forward, Claiming Three Nazi Divisions Smashed As Red Troops Re-Take Klin.

BULLETIN

ANKARA — (Delayed)—(UP)—Informed German circles reported today that Adolf Hitler has gone to his Berchtesgaden mountain retreat under medical orders to "take a rest cure." Hitler, these sources said, was warned by his physicians that he seriously has overstrained his physical capacity in recent months.

(By Associated Press)

Britain's desert armies in North Africa have swept 70 miles west of Tobruk and slashed into the heart of strongly-held Axis positions in a great new battle of tanks and men, Cairo headquarters reported today, as a decisive phase of the struggle appeared under way.

British armored forces have now encircled all remaining German tank units in Libya, it was announced.

The British Middle East command said Imperial troops, outflanking Axis divisions, had driven 30 miles beyong Gazala, which lies 40 miles west of Tobruk, and were "continuing their thrust against the enemy reserves and rear."

Advance British forces, the communique said, have already penetrated the center of Axis defenses manned by strong elements of three German-Italian divisions.

Earlier advices reaching London said "no decisive result" had yet been achieved in the fighting.

However, Lieut. Col. L. C. M. S. Avery, British secretary for India, declared in London that the Libyan campaign "now seems definitely turning toward a great decisive victory."

A bulletin from Adolf Hitler's high command said German North African forces were fighting "heavy defensive battles" west of Tobruk.

The German communique asserted that Axis troops "smashed strong sections of the enemy," captured several hundred prisoners and seized or destroyed a large number of tanks and guns.

An Italian communique reported that Fascist motorized and armored divisions, supported by large German units, were fighting tenaciously against the British sweep to the west, inflicting heavy losses.

On the Russio-German war front, Soviet dispatches said Gen. Gregory K. Zhukov's Red armies

300 ENLIST IN CIVIL DEFENSE

'Gratified By Response' Says Kalbfleisch; Committee Still Needs Others.

Enrollments for auxiliary fire, police and nurses units soared past the 300 mark today as Mansfield citizens responded enthusiastically to the civilian defense committee's appeal for volunteers

"We are thoroughly gratified at this response," said Municipal Judge G. E. Kalbfleisch, chairman of the committee. "However, we want at least twice that number before Friday night, when the committee is to meet again."

Judge Kalbfleisch made the first official check of the six enrollment stations today, and reported more than 280 applications had been received. Within an hour, a score of other volunteers had turned in their applications. These are being

TEACHERS ASK SALARY BOOST

Heated Discussion Develops at Board Meeting; Action on Request Delayed.

A committee representing the Mansfield Teachers' association went to the Mansfield board of education at its meeting last night with a flat request for a general salary increase for teachers in the city schools to meet the rising living costs.

After a 45-minute discussion which once became heated the board agreed to study the teachers' request and then asked the committee to go over the 1942 appropriation figures with the board next month and suggest how the salaries can be raised with the present school funds. No amounts were mentioned by the teachers in asking for raises.

One member of the teachers' committee suggested that the board might try for a share of the estimated $11,000,000 state sales tax surplus

To that proposal Supt. W. L. Miller replied that he was "doubtful if any subdivision ever gets any of that money." He added that the state administration intended to use $6,000,000 of the so-called "surplus" to pay off the school debt that was incurred when times were worse than now.

The teachers' principal spokesman was Richard L. Nixon, Senior high instructor and chairman of Report Argentine Considers Declaring State of Siege.

BUENOS AIRES—(INS)—Guarded statements published by the newspaper La Nacion and other responsible organs indicated today that the Argentine government this afternoon may declare a state of siege.

The state of siege ostensibly would be for the purpose of providing an adequate instrument to deal with "certain factors to have arisen as a consequence of the recent spread of the war."

The newspaper El Mundo reported Vice President Castillo had explained privately that the measure is intended primarily to enable the government to comply fully with treaty engagements, by prohibiting propaganda against the United States.

LOSES LIFE

Family In Ohio Notified Of British Surgeon's Death.

MENTOR, O. —(U.P.)— Surgeon Commander Douglas A. Newberry of the British navy, whose family lives in Mentor, lost his life in the sinking of the British battleship Repulse last week, his family learned today.

The surgeon commander's sister at Singapore cabled Mrs. Newberry of the loss of her husband.

First Mansfield Casualty In Pacific 'Wounded In Action'

First Mansfield casualty in the Pacific war was reported today with receipt of a telegram from the navy department by Mrs. Kenneth Ross, 627 Stocking avenue, which advised that her brother, Charles C Feeman, had been "wounded in action."

As is usually the case, details were lacking. Meanwhile, the announcement by Secretary of the Navy Knox that 2,638 enlisted men and 91 officers were killed in the Japanese air attack on the Pearl Harbor Naval Base in Hawaii heightened the apprehension of families and friends of other Mansfield youths in the war area.

The notification received by Mrs Ross was the third such message concerning war casualties affecting Mansfield area families. Eugene Oscar Roe, 18, brother of George H. Roe, of 706 Bowman street, was killed, and Samuel F. Bowen, 25, son of Mr and Mrs. Fred Bowen, of Big Prairie, was "wounded in action."

Families and friends of others from this area now believed to be in the Pacific war zone, fearful because of Secretary Knox's disclosure of the heavy losses, were

British Fear Hongkong Loss, See New Threat To Singapore

LONDON—An informed source said today that Hongkong might have to be evacuated and that a serious threat to Singapore had developed in land fighting on the Malay peninsula.

"British lack of naval superiority has changed the entire situation in northern Malaya," the source said "The British land defense was planned on the basis of naval superiority, but both the British and United States fleets have suffered hard blows.

"Now the naval situation has allowed the Japanese to develop an offensive on a large scale. There definitely is danger—a real threat to Singapore by land."

Several British quarters expressed doubt that Hongkong could hold out indefinitely against the concentrated Japanese attack.

A communique issued in Chungking and reported by Reuters said Chinese forces had intensified a drive against the flank and rear of the Japanese forces in an attempt to relieve pressure on Hongkong

Near Canton, some 75 miles northwest of Hongkong, the Chinese were reported harassing Japanese movements along the Canton-Hongkong railway.

The Chinese also were said in

HOOVER ASKS PRICE CURBS

Ex-President Appears Before Congress, Backs Henderson on Wartime Controls.

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON—Former President Herbert Hoover asked congress today to give President Roosevelt the "widest latitude" on legislation establishing wartime controls over prices and commodities

"We cannot know what the situation may be a year or five years hence," Hoover told the senate banking committee as he drew from his experience as food administrator during the last World war to suggest a 14-point program for controlling prices and commodities

Mr Hoover in a prepared statement said he agreed with Leon Henderson, defense price administrator, that declarations of war had changed the entire situation since the house passed a price control bill.

"The problem has moved from the limited area of preparedness to the direct field of total national mobilization to fight a long and desperate war," the witness said. "This change makes even a wider degree of controls imperative"

Emphasizing the need for voluntary co-operation ahead of force in gearing the country to wartime production, Mr Hoover said, "all our people are united to prosecute the war. They realize the necessity for self-sacrifice, and are seeking for co-operative service. Almost anything can be asked of our people at this time under this influence."

As a result of the war, he continued, the problem now becomes wider than price controls and requires "commodity control, of which price control is but one segment * * * the problem is therefore rather one of stabilization and orderly movement on the whole economic front."

FDR Selects Board To Probe Pearl Harbor Disaster

(By International News Service)

WASHINGTON—While every American citizen thrilled with pride over the first official report of American heroism in the tragic battle of Pearl Harbor, President Roosevelt today was selecting a board of inquiry to determine finally whether the Japanese invaders caught the U. S. Pacific command napping in Hawaii on the "bloody Sunday" of Dec. 7.

The commander-in-chief will convene an investigating board before the day ends to determine all facts in the informal charge of Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox that "the United States services were not on the alert against the surprise air (and submarine) attack on Hawaii."

There was a possibility that a full probing of the facts might cause some heads to roll in the various branches of the armed services.

Even this realization, however, failed to diminish nationwide satisfaction over the dramatic account of American valor during those first frightful hours of the war, and the official assurance that rumor-factory reports of U. S. naval losses had been greatly exaggerated.

Alert on other potential fronts, all of official and military Washington took due note of Secretary of State Cordell Hull's latest appeal to the Vichy government, pondering whether it might be reminiscent of the last-minute peace proposal President Roosevelt made to the "Son of Heaven" in Tokyo.

The president again nominated Adolf Hitler as the unconscionable mastermind behind Axis efforts at

Japs Aim New Attack On U. S. Naval Base At Manila

(By Associated Press)

MANILA—The Japanese aimed a new air attack today at Olongapo naval base on Manila bay but apparently made no attempt to widen the three toeholds they obtained last week on Luzon island at heavy cost in men, ships and planes.

A communique issued at 4 p. m. (2 a. m. EST) by U. S. army headquarters—the briefest bulletin since the war began Dec. 7—dismissed the day's developments with a terse "No change in the situation on the ground."

Previous communiques had said that the army had things well in hand at Vigan and Aparri in northern Luzon, and at Legaspi on the extreme southeastern tip of the island, where the Japanese were reported to have landed limited numbers of troops last week.

The attack on the Olongapo naval base was carried out at dawn. Army headquarters gave no details of the raid, but it apparently was light, for Manila—50 miles away—had no alert.

Failure of the Japanese to attack Manila last night or during the day gave the city a respite of more than 28 hours from the intermittent alarms it has been undergoing for the past week.

It was the second successive day devoid of news concerning developments on the Luzon land front. Yesterday official reports said that Japanese activity was confined solely to the air, including another attack on Nichols field near Manila.

Sunday, the Japanese apparently attempted to land more troops at Legaspi, but the army said that its bombers, resisting the attempt, had heavily damaged two enemy transports.

There was no mention of further U. S. air attacks on the Japanese landing forces, either at Legaspi or in the north.

however, for the lack of vigilance and the unpreparedness which made the Japanese surprise attack possible. The words "unbelievable . . . amazing . . . incredible" were used to describe the revelations which Knox made yesterday in his report.

Although Knox announced President Roosevelt was instituting a formal investigation, there was some sentiment in congress for a separate inquiry of its own "to fix responsibility."

The losses, as Knox reported them, were: the battleship Arizona, a 32,600-ton dreadnaught commissioned in 1916; the destroyers Cassin, Shaw and Downes, 1,500-tonners of 1935-1936 construction; the target and training ship Utah, a former battleship of 19,800 tons which was launched in 1909, and the 4,200-ton mine layer Oglala.

An unspecified number of ships were damaged, some so lightly that they already have been able to rejoin the main fleet, and others so severely that repairs will require from a week to several months. Among those requiring major work was the old battleship Oklahoma, 29,000 tons, which capsized but can be righted and repaired.

The report disclosed that Japan had temporarily upset the capital ship ratio by knocking out two American battleships—a gain quickly cancelled a few days later when U. S. bombers blasted two Japanese battleships out of action near the Philippines. The Japanese ships were of the 29,330-ton Kongo class, and the army here claimed that one of them—the Haruna—had been sent to the bottom.

Knox made no attempt to explain away the complete surprise of the Japanese attack. "The United States services were not on the alert," he said flatly, adding that this fact called for the investigation by the president.

But for all the smashing surprise, Knox reported, the Japanese had failed to win the big stake they gambled for so recklessly—the knockout of the main U. S. fleet.

The main body of the fleet, the secretary announced, "are all at sea seeking contact with the enemy."

The known Japanese losses in the Pearl Harbor raid were listed as 41 aircraft and three submarines—one of them a two-man undersea boat which succeeded in penetrating into the inner harbor despite its outer anti-submarine defenses.

The navy had a total of 2,729 killed, and 656 wounded—a heavy blow to a fleet manned by specialists of years training. The army had 168 killed, 223 wounded and 26 missing.

The extremely heavy navy losses were attributed to the fact that some of the lost ships capsized, trapping their crews below decks as they rolled over in their death plunges.

Secretary Knox attributed much of the Japanese success to Nippon's fifth column. "I think," he said, "that the most effective fifth-column work of the entire war was done in Hawaii, with the possible exception of Norway."

The army's losses, Knox said, were severe as far as aircraft were concerned but replacements had either arrived or were on their way.

Still Claims U. S. Fleet Wiped Out

BULLETIN

TOKYO—(Official radio received by (AP))—Both houses of the Japanese diet passed unanimously today an extra war budget of 2,800,000,000 yen (about $644,000,000).

(By Associated Press)

TOKYO — Premier General Hideki Tojo, recapitulating Japanese claims of successes won in the first week of the war, told the diet today that "the bulk of the American fleet which had been in Hawaii is destroyed and the main body of the British Far Eastern fleet is crushed."

(U. S. Navy Secretary Knox, back from a flying visit to Hawaii acknowledged yesterday that the surprise Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor had sunk the battleship Arizona, the old target ship Utah and three destroyers and had damaged the battleship Oklahoma, and several smaller vessels.

Declaring that "our fighting forces have speedily broken through enemy key positions within less than 10 days," Tojo said:

"The encircling front against Japan, the strength of which the enemy had exaggerated and given wide publicity in an attempt to intimidate us, has been shattered at various places. The anti-Japanese encircling front is on a fair way to collapse."

However, Tojo warned the diet —which was summoned in special session to approve emergency war measures—of the dangers of over-optimism.

"A war remains waiting to be fought," he said.

JAM OFFICE FOR CERTIFICATES

Applicants Stage Rush For Birth Records as War Steps Up Requirements.

Since the United States' declaration of war on the Axis powers last week, clerks in probate court and in the Mansfield health department have been busier than ever issuing copies of birth certificates.

Increased vigilance at industrial plants handling defense orders is believed responsible for most of the increase, but some of the applicants explained that they just wanted to have proof that they are American citizens.

The rush for birth certificates started more than a year ago when industries began requiring their workers to show proof of citizenship. Applications were falling off until the war declaration gave them another boost.

Records of births before 1908 are available at the probate court office in the courthouse if the applicant was born in Richland county. After 1908 the records were kept by the health department at the city building. A small charge is made for issuing a copy of the birth record, while the cost is greater if probate court and health board clerks have to help establish the age of the applicant or correct errors in the records.

world domination. The mikado and his militaristically-minded Japanese subjects were relegated to satellite roles along with Mussolini and the hard-pressed Italians under the Nazi heel.

Headlining a celebration of the 150th anniversary of the promulgation of the bill of rights—arranged before World war II blossomed into all its deadly fury—Mr. Roosevelt sharply contrasted Hitler's philosophy wherein "der fuehrer" would supplant God and democratic government with his own single-handed rule of all the world.

Speaking solemnly of those liberties for which an aroused 130,000,000 Americans are now fighting, the president said:

"We are solemnly determined that no power or combination of powers of this earth shall shake our hold upon them."

On Capitol Hill, the president was getting 100 per cent legislative support in his program for placing the United States on a complete war footing. The first wartime appropriation bill, a $10,000,000,000 measure providing funds for all parts of the armed services, was finally enacted and sent to the White House for his signature.

Congressional leaders, meanwhile, hastened action on the new draft extension act, which would enroll all men between the ages of 18 and 64, although quite probably eliminating boys under 21 from immediate military service. Prompt passage was promised also on the new "war power" bill, giving Mr. Roosevelt slightly more wartime authority than was exercised by President Wilson in the first World war. This measure covers censorship and trading with the enemy.

Measures to strengthen the navy, to provide protection for civilian populations during air raids, and control prices in order to check inflation, were on the way through congress. Leaders hoped to enact all of them within another week or 10 days.

In its eighth communique, meanwhile, the navy reported that the island of Midway and Wake are still resisting Japanese attacks. No mention was made of Guam, indicating that it is now in the invaders' hands.

the communique to be attacking the Japanese in Hangchow bay, some 700 miles north China coast, south of Shanghai, where they claimed to have recaptured several strategic points.

Continuous heavy gunfire was reported from both Hongkong and the Japanese occupied mainland point of Kowloon following the announcement that British forces had withdrawn to the island of Hongkong.

On the Malayan front, the British announced that mechanized Japanese troops operating under cover of dive-bombers had smashed their way into southern Kedah, the 100-mile-long northwestern Malaya state bordering Thailand.

British and Indian defenders withdrew after a five-day Japanese offensive which the British claimed cost the attackers heavily.

The Japanese thrust apparently carried them some 40 miles along the road to the great British naval base at Singapore, 400 miles away. The British were reported fighting desperately against better-equipped Japanese.

received at police headquarters, the four fire stations, and the Red Cross office.

The quota set by the committee for the auxiliary units is 535. Of this number, 100 will comprise the police unit, 360 the four 90-member fire units, and 75 the first nurses aid corps.

A complete program of instruction has been set up for each of the units. It is hoped to start the training within several days after the committee's Friday night meeting, when members of the group wil go over the applications in detail.

"Naturally, the auxiliary workers will be selected very carefully because of the importance of the work they will be called upon to do," Judge Kalbfleisch said.

Fred W. Hien, commander of McLaughlin Camp No. 12, Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil war, announced that the membership of the organization last night adopted a 12-point program pledging to "give our lives, if necessary, in defense of our country." The group pledged its aid to the Red Cross, to purchase defense bonds and stamps, to assist in conserving vital materials, and to assist in the naturalization of aliens.

Chinese Intensify Attack on Japs

CHUNGKING, China—(INS)—Increased Chinese attacks designed to aid the defenders of Hongkong were announced by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek's military headquarters today.

"The Chinese also attacked the Japanese at Hangchow Bay and recaptured a number of strategic points.

Maybe you can't serve at the front—but there will be something for you to do at home. Right now you can buy defense stamps or bonds and contribute to the Red Cross.

Military and Civilian Service Ages

ACTUAL NEEDS, rather than present predictions, will finally determine the extent to which the United States must enlist its manpower in military service.

As it now appears to Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of selective service, it may not be necessary to go outside the 21-35 age group to accomplish what must be done, and there will be further reaching into that group of 2,800,000 registrants before the minimum is reduced or the maximum extended for selectees, although younger and older volunteers are acceptable in various branches of service.

It is estimated that an army of 7,000,000 men could be made available in the age range between 19 and 44 inclusive, if emergency requires, but first call will be on young men from 21 to 28, of whom around a million and a half will undergo re-examination after earlier rejection on account of minor physical defects, or exemption or deferment because of employment or dependents.

Proposed registration of younger and older men, as is recommended by Secretary of War Stimson, seems intended to supply a record of national potentialities in manpower, possible military training of some kind up to the age of 44 inclusive, and opportunities for civilian service to the age of 65, although a number of men above that age are already asking if there is something they can do.

Response of Mansfielders to the request of the civilian defense committee for men and women volunteers to serve in various capacities in the civilian program that is being developed for this city shows the extent to which people have been aroused to the need of everybody putting their shoulder to the wheel and aiding in the war effort. At the age of 81, General John J. Pershing says: "I hasten to offer my services, in any way in which my experience and my strength, to the last ounce, will be of help in the fight."

As Employment Nears Fifty Million

WHILE first thought must be given to war-time production of planes, ships, munitions and all kinds of military equipment for our own country and the nations fighting with us, there are civilian needs that dare not be disregarded.

A recent estimate by the Alexander Hamilton Institute places the number of people now employed in the United States at 49,310,000, with probability that this will reach 50,000,000 by the first of the year—or five million more than were employed during the boom year of 1929.

A considerable percentage of this employment, with the vast volume of income represented, results from defense and war production and vast federal spending but it creates a situation in which a great surplus of earnings may cause runaway inflation unless supplies of consumer goods and foodstuffs are produced in sufficient volume to meet reasonable demands.

Part of this surplus, of course, will be safely invested in defense bonds, contributed to various good causes and used in paying increased taxes, but much will still be left for the purchase of personal and family needs, and it is important that, insofar as possible, these be met.

Some Things To Remember

ADJUSTMENT of the mental attitude of individuals toward the reality of war has been rapid but there are a number of things that should be kept in mind in order that bad news—which is sure to come at times—will not disturb national, community and personal morale, and that assurance of eventual victory is felt by everyone.

Here are a few things that it will be well to remember:

First, we are far better prepared for war now than we have ever been, at the start, in our national history.

Second, this is primarily an industrial war, and we have the best industrial equipment and resources in the world, in full operation, with steadily growing output.

Third, we have a virtually unlimited supply of men better adapted to this mechanized warfare than any of our antagonists are.

Fourth, we are a united nation, making one vast human machine in our common purpose.

Fifth, we have a habit of victory—we have never lost a war.

And to cap the climax: "So conquer we must, for our cause it is just: and this be our motto—In God Is Our Trust."

California Turns Thrifty

CALIFORNIA'S state government—believe it or not, and explain it as you like—is going on a cash basis next February. It is now paying off the last of its debts, incurred largely for public relief during the bad years, and tax revenues are rising.

Various other states are said to be almost in the same enviable position, with no standing public debt to weigh them down like that of the federal government. Ohio boasts of a fat surplus in the treasury. This is a field where there are fine opportunities for patriotic competition. It is pleasing that so many states can be thrifty, or at least appear so at a time when Washington's federal debt is so vast and rolling up faster than ever.

In fairness, however, it should be recognized that the states appear thrifty mainly because Washington itself has assumed so much of their burdens for public relief, highways, bridges and so on. And the states themselves are not so lucky about that as local patriots seem to think, when they have wangled another big improvement out of Uncle Sam. Some states have done better for themselves than others, in such procedure, but they all join in paying the federal taxes, and in the long run they may come out about even.

People are losing confidence in that old saying about there being "honor among thieves"—it appears they're no more dependable than politicians.

"Dentists say the face grows longer between the ages of 16 and 19"—probably in making ready to become taxpayers.

Young's Behind-the-Scene Views

—By JAMES R. YOUNG

(Editor's Note—In the following article James R. Young prominent author who was International News Service's chief correspondent in Tokyo for 12 years, gives some interesting behind-the-scene views of what is taking or has taken place in Japan.)

WHEN Japan declared war on the United States one week ago, the restraining personality of the emperor's palace, Prince Chichibu, was not present. He has been ill several months.

The princess, who was educated at a Quaker school in Washington, and is the daughter of Baron Tsuneo Matsuadaira, former ambassador to the court of St. James, is nursing the prince at their seaside villa. Baron Matsuadaira was the object of a dynamite plot for which several army men of Shizan 'blue gang' have been prosecuted.

Another opponent of the war plan was grand chamberlain of the imperial household, Admiral Kantaro Suzuki, who was among several, including Admiral Mitsumasa Lonai, who have been marked for assassination.

ONE of the toughest Japanese militarists, a brother-in-law of the emperor, Prince Higashikuni, has been named commander-in-chief of the land forces in Japan proper. I last saw him after an inspection tour he had made to Manchuria and North China where he was embroiled in factional fights with leaders of the famous Kwantung clique of the Japanese army.

A TOKYO dispatch reports a move to pull down the statue of Commodore Matthew Gabriel Perry, who opened Japan to foreign trade. The statue is near the Yokouska naval base, south of Yokohama. The monument was unveiled by Mrs. Joseph Clark Grew, a grand-niece, seven years ago when several of us made a trip with Admiral Kickisaburo Nomura (recent ambassador to Washington), on a Japanese destroyer, to participate in the celebration of the treaty between the United States and Japan. Ambassador Grew made a speech.

Admiral Nomura responded with: "The Japanese nation has a love for peace. Japan will never use armaments for aggression under any circumstances. It is not compatible with our love of peace."

FOR the last six years the Japanese have been dredging harbors, leveling fields and building underground oil storage tanks in the South Seas mandated islands. From those points they initiated their attacks on Dec. 7.

Several times I applied for steamer passage for a cruise through the islands. Always, they replied, no berths were available, the health conditions of the islands were not good, or hotel accommodations were scarce.

I discovered a $10,000,000 budget for "harbor improvements" in the fiscal estimates one year. The minister of overseas affairs explained the amount was for "removing malarial conditions among the natives."

FORTY astronomers from the United States and Germany wanted to see the eclipse from a South Sea island base. They selected one island. The Japanese picked, however, Orlock island, to "help the advancement of science and astronomy." To facilitate the scientific adventure, the navy ministry sent the astronomers on the Kasuga, a warship of the 1904 days, which cost them about $20,000, but the appropriation was worth the figure, since it steered the foreign visitors away from zones that were fortified in violation of the league of nations mandate giving Japan the islands.

Concentrated Rations for Soldiers.

—By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

I FELT the other day when I read in a magazine about the concentrated rations that the soldiers are going to get, as if time had turned backward and I was a boy again at the time of the Spanish-American war.

I remember a small detachment of what we will call "Pride's Own Regiment" being detailed to go out in a vacant lot near my home in 1898 and being made to live on concentrated rations of food for two weeks. The vacant lot was surrounded by guards so nobody could escape.

It is very desirable for the army to have a concentrated ration. The big trouble with an army is that it has to eat, and this requires cumbersome apparatus and long lines of communication. If you could give a soldier something about the size of a cigaret package which would contain enough concentrated food to last him for a week, you could send him forward without waiting for the wagon trains and be able to win a great many more battles.

Not Satisfying.

It sounds very simple. Sugar is good nourishment that you can put in small compass and you ought to be able to do that with all food elements. The trouble heretofore has been that the concentrated food just doesn't seem to do the business.

In the Spanish-American war days it might have been the lack of vitamins, but nowadays we can get vitamins in pill form so that shouldn't be a difficulty. But the complaints I heard during the Spanish-American war had nothing to do with vitamins. It was what might be called the element of fillingness that the soldiers deplored.

When I say they deplored it, I mean they really DEPLORED it! Such command as I have over the cuss words in the English language was learned from the remarks of those soldiers in that vacant lot behind my home engaged in deploring their concentrated rations.

Modern Developments.

I doubt if matters will be much improved with modern developments either. I have heard rumors to the effect that the morale of the present army is not quite as high as the officers would like to have it. I doubt if the morale will be improved by the following breakfast:

Pemmican biscuits, graham crackers, malted-milk tablets, canned veal loaf, soluable coffee and sugar, stick of gum, and water.

When the long shadows of the evening stretch across the camp fires and the boys sit down to the following dinner: Pemmican biscuits, graham crackers, canned pork-beef sausage, fudge candy, lemonade powder and sugar, stick of gum and water, I doubt if the old songs will ring across the wildwood the way they did when we had bully beef and all the trimmings that go with it.

P. S. I tried to get some of this concentrated ration in order to try it myself before advising my readers about it, but the quartermaster of the Chicago Depot tells me that a strike at the can company will delay procurement of this ration for several months.

Timely Editorial

Vandalism Condemned.

In the midst of news that was shaking the world, a great many Americans have found time to notice disapprovingly that a patriot has chopped down some of the famous Japanese cherry trees in Washington. In New York City, vandals went to work on a Japanese pavilion left over from the fair.

Undoubtedly, Japanese lanterns, Japanese gardens and a lot of trinkets made in Japan during the years when the currents of international trade were carrying steel, iron and oil one way and dime store novelties the other way will feel the wrath of an angry nation.

But there promises to be less of this sort of thing than there was the last time the United States went to war. If present signs mean anything, something has happened to the notion that hysteria and childishness have anything to do with the successful prosecution of war.—Canton Repository.

Washington Merry-Go-Round

Centralized Censorship Planned To Direct Release of War News

—By DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN

WASHINGTON—Behind the scenes, Roosevelt already has taken steps for a wartime censor with sweeping powers to dictate what war news shall be published or not published in the newspapers.

Already he has appointed a committee of three—Vice President Wallace, Postmaster General Walker, and Attorney General Biddle to recommend a censor and draw up legislation giving authority to censor the press.

Actually, the censor won't be called by that name. His official title will be Director of Public Information. But his function will be to supervise all reports of military operations and other information deemed of military significance.

At present, official reports on military events are issued in the form of communiques by the war and navy departments and by the commanding officers of units and areas. The White House also gives out frequent announcements, and the various defense agencies do likewise.

There is no one central supervisory and distributing agency, as the British have in their Ministry of Information. As originally proposed, the Office of the Coordinator of Information, headed by able Colonel William Donovan, was to do this job. But the army and navy, jealous of their bureaucratic powers, objected so vehemently that the plan was dropped, and Donovan was given the task of waging the short-wave counter-propaganda war against the Axis. In this work his organization has been extremely effective.

The three-man cabinet committee asked by the president to select a censor have under consideration the following: Harold Ickes, hard-boiled secretary of the interior; Colonel Donovan; Archibald MacLeish, librarian of congress and director of the recently created Office of Figures and Facts; and Ulric Bell, star correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Senate Resolution.

FIRST thing the president did when he retired to Speaker Rayburn's office, following his historic message asking congress to declare war on Japan, was to ask for a drink of water.

A pitcher of ice water had been placed on the stand of the House "well" from which he delivered the message, but in the gripping excitement of the occasion the president overlooked it.

Second thing the president did was to relieve the tension with a wisecrack at the expense of the senate committee which escorted him to and from the house chamber. The group consisted of Democratic Leader Alben Barkley of Kentucky, Republican Leader Charles McNary of Oregon, and spry, 83-year-old Carter Glass of Virginia.

Having escorted the president out of the house chamber, they fidgeted to return to the senate to take up the war resolution. Finally, Barkley explained:

"Mr. President, we're sorry, but we'll have to go. Our colleagues are waiting in the senate and we would like to join them."

"You can't fool me," grinned the president. "I know the reason you fellows are so anxious to get away. You want to get back to the senate so you can beat the house in passing the war resolution."

The trio admitted this was the reason and rushed off.

Note: The act declaring war on Japan will go down in history as Senate Joint Resolution 116, since the senate did act first. The house passed an identical resolution H. J. R. 254, but before the lengthy house roll-call was finished, a senate clerk appeared with the adopted S. J. R. 116. Under parliamentary rules, this was substituted for the house bill and passed by unanimous consent.

Japs Knew In Advance.

IF THE TWO Japanese ambassadors negotiating with Secretary Hull did not know their armed forces were going to attack, apparently they, themselves were about the only Japanese around the embassy who remained in the dark.

Ryuichi Ando, listed officially as an attache of the Japanese embassy, actually was a student at Swarthmore college, living at the home of a peaceful Quaker family where he was very charming, polite and made a lot of friends.

However, on Sunday, November 30, just one week before the fatal attack on Hawaii, Ando returned to college from a trip to Washington and hastily packed his bags. Making polite farewells, he explained that he was leaving for Brazil—and vanished.

It was seven days later that the Japanese ambassadors delivered their final note to Secretary Hull—about thirty minutes after the attack on Honolulu began.

Censorship In Action.

ONE of the first South American newspapermen to file a message after the Hawaiian debacle was Fernando Ortiz Echague, Washington correspondent of La Nacion of Buenos Aires. La Nacion is not only one of the most influential papers in South America, but one of the biggest boosters of friendship with the United States.

Senor Echague's message, therefore, was a very friendly one.

Several hours passed, and the telegraph office finally told him his news dispatch had been held up by the naval censor—because it was written in Spanish.

Later it was discovered that all messages from Latin American newspapermen were refused by the naval censor—because they were written in Spanish. And they continued to be refused, even though Russian, German and Italian censors read English and every other language in order to clear press dispatches quickly.

Finally Michael McDermott, able head of the state department's press relations, called the naval censor and said:

"These men are friends of ours. They're trying to consolidate public opinion for us in Latin America. Just clear their dispatches for a few days until you get a Spanish-reading censor."

"Orders is orders," replied the navy. "We can't take a chance."

IT COULD happen only in the good old U. S. A. . . . House Republican Leader Joe Martin getting out of bed at 2:30 a. m. Monday, December 8, to write the speech he delivered that day urging 100 per cent Republican support for the president's request for a declaration of war on Japan . . . Roosevelt-hating Senator Burt Wheeler of Montana issuing a statement in Colorado, a few hours after the Japanese attack, urging an immediate declaration of war and declaring, "The only thing now is to do our best to lick the hell out of them" . . . Irvin S. Cobb resigning from the executive board of the America First Committee . . . Ardent isolationists Representatives Harold Knutson of Minnesota and James Van Zandt of Pennsylvania hotly urging Representative Jeannette Rankin of Montana to vote for the war declaration.

Man About Manhattan

—By GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK—It's a cold day outside. The cops have icicles on their noses. Let's drop by 20 Gramercy Park and warm our mitts over Ludwig Bemelmans' fire.

Ludwig Bemelmans is the kind of citizen who gets paid twice for everything he does. I'll explain that later. Right now he's shaving, so let's look around.

THIS apartment is developing into a sort of one man Neuilly fair. It looks north across the iron-grilled park. On the floor is a zebra skin. From the ceiling hangs an iron bird cage. This cage weighs 120 lbs. It is shaped like the Gigi palace in Venice. Its bars have been removed, and from it dangles long entwining strands of ivy. Only a hawser that would berth the Normandie holds it in place.

Diagonally across is a man-high pedestal crowned by a life-size cast iron rooster, a relic of 18th century Maine. The ceiling is an enlarged steel engraving of the streets of Paris. There are weird paintings, a red lamp, a 17th century peasant's cabinet, a proclamation by de Gaulle (in French), a candelabra made of a metal fish that has sprouted stag's antlers, several albums of Tchaikovsky, Rachmaninoff and Prokofiev, a pair of Tyrolian britches, a live black cat that comes in and pours himself out on the floor like a glass of water. This cat's name is Cat.

WHEN we came in Bemelmans was shaving, wasn't he! He's through now. Here he comes slapping the lotion into his pores. Something of that quality Carl Van Doren calls Bemelmans' "will to happiness" is in his greeting. Probably it is this that explains his talent for drawing double pay for practically everything he does. This is what I mean:

In 1914 Bemelmans refugeed from Austria. Several years later, like millions of other Americans, he went into the army, and for this service he was paid $31 a month. But unlike most of the others, Bemelmans remembered his experiences and wrote a book about them. This was "My War With the United States." And so he was paid again.

Then he went to work for a New York hotel, waiting table, running errands and doing dirty, odd jobs. Thousands of people did the same thing, and were paid. But again Bemelmans remembered, and write a book. This was "Life Class," and he was paid again.

SINCE then he has been living his own life and getting paid double for everything he does. Wherever he goes and whatever he does he draws pictures about it for Town & Country and for the New Yorker. At the moment he is writing a play about a refugee photographer. He leaves for England in February. Once he ran a high-toned restaurant called Hapsburgh House, and this lingers in his memory like last night's gardenias; for Bemelmans could not refrain from feeding the waiters and the kitchen staff on champagne and soon they toasted themselves into bankruptcy.

I glance across the table and see a new book by Bemelmans, "Hotel Splendide." Did I say Bemelmans gets paid double? I'm a piker. He gets paid triple. "Hotel Splendide" is behind the scenes stuff in the most deluxe hotel in the world. It's just out. He's getting paid again.

A Farmer's Diary

In a Country Bank

—By CALVIN A. BYERS

THE president of a village bank was talking with a boy of 20 or so, and I stood outside by the small writing shelf and waited. The elderly man's face was bent close to the lad, and I saw an occasional twinkle in his blue eyes.

"So you want me to help you finance a car of your own, so you can surprise your Dad! Well, of course, you're a good risk—I've known your Dad and you both for quite a long time. And no doubt the car you looked at is a good buy—but if you're going to install a radio, a heater, a defroster and buy all new tires, you'll have doubled the cost of your car by spring—and it'll still be only a fair used one."

"But what do you think I should do?" asked the boy, disappointed.

"Well"—the old man scratched his gray head—"I'll tell you, like you were a son of mine. There's your Dad has a good car—one any young fellow could be proud to be trusted with. Why don't you make a bargain with him to use the car occasionally for taking care of it, and then buy your own gas and oil? If you're driving a high class car, you'll be more careful with it. If I know your Dad it'd worry him to have you riding around in a rattletrap—besides you'd have to buy license and upkeep for two cars instead of one—and you'd be making a debt.

"Understand, I'm not afraid I wouldn't get the money, if I loaned it to you—but if you'll make a saving account of what you'd spend at the garage, I'll pay you three per cent interest on your earnings, instead of you paying me interest on your note. And in the long run my bank'll be better off—and so will you.

"I've lived along in this business and I've seen young fellows lose all they had because they spent their earnings faster than they earned them. Earnings represent toil and toil takes time and time is the very stuff your life is made of. Saving hard earned money is saving a precious portion of a man's own life—and it develops character."

The young man stood up. The other rose, but went on with a story to clinch his point. "I know the president of a factory that employs a hundred men," he said. "He found that the 18 best men he had were all saving money regularly. So he called all his workers together and agreed to duplicate the amount of interest each of them was receiving from his savings. To his astonishment, the whole personnel responded with more and better work. From a purely business standpoint he was ahead . . . you think it over. If you still want the money, I'll give it to you."

KNOX RECOUNTS HEROIC ACTS OF NAVY AT HAWAII

Describes Fighting Spirit of Americans In Surprise Attack By Japan.

he dashed straight for his battle station on an anti-aircraft gun.

"At the several naval air stations attacked crews dashed into the flames enveloping planes set ablaze by incendiaries, stripped off free machine guns and with them returned the enemy's fire. In at least one instance an enemy craft was shot down. . . .

"Cool as ice, the men who manned the navy and yard signal tower from which flashed orders to the anchored fleet, carried out their assignment under a hail of machine gun fire and bombs from the enemy. . . ."

There were many heroes, but most of them will go unsung. And yet, it isn't the story of this hero, or that.

"The real story of Pearl Harbor," Secretary Knox said, ". . . lies in the splendid manner in which all hands did their job. . . ."

Pearl Harbor was a tough time But the navy was known tough times before. During one of them back in 1779 a man named John Paul Jones said: "I have not yet begun to fight."

Ohio Soldiers Say They Don't Want to be Heroes

COLUMBUS —(AP)— Ohio soldiers, arriving home on Christmas furloughs, made it clear today that they want no tearful scenes of the "just before the battle mother" type.

Corp. Dean A. Myers of Columbus, a member of the 37th division stationed at Camp Shelby, Miss., said that the soldier is bothered most by the folk back home.

"He is worrying because they probably are worrying about him," he said.

Myers said a soldier did not want to be regarded as a hero by the home folk, except perhaps his girl friend

The Camp Shelby public relations office reported, too, that there were too many weepy or abnormally "cheery" letters being received by the soldiers.

FUEL OUTPUT HIKED BY U. S.

Army, Navy Hike Production of Aircraft Gasoline.

NEW YORK—(AP)—By a stroke of the pen, the army and navy have added 300,000 gallons a day to America's production of 100-octane gasoline, the fuel that makes planes go 25 per cent faster and better.

They did this by raising the amount of lead permitted in the 100-octane fuel from three cubic centimeters a gallon to four.

This change immediately gives the United States a production of 2,100,000 gallons daily of the super-fuel compared with 1,800,000 gallons a few weeks ago.

were furiously battering the Germans on both flanks of the Moscow defense arc, overruning scores of positions and strewing the battlefields with Nazi dead.

A special Soviet communique said more than three German divisions—perhaps 45,000 troops—were smashed and more than 13,000 Germans killed or wounded in the recapture of Klin. In addition, huge quantities of Nazi equipment fell into Russian hands, the communique said.

The Soviet radio reported 6,000 Germans were killed or wounded in the smashing of the 44th Nazi infantry division at "CH," and another 8,000 Germans killed or wounded in seven days of fighting in the Kalinin sector, 95 miles northwest of Moscow.

A Red army bulletin announced that Russian troops had recaptured strategic Klin, 50 miles northwest of Moscow, and had taken three key points in the Tula zone, 100 miles south of the U. S. S. R. capital—blunting both points of the Nazi pincer with which Adolf Hitler once hoped to squeeze Moscow into surrender.

A Stockholm newspaper report received in Bern said lice-born typhus had infected some German troops, already suffering from sub-zero cold and supply difficulties. The epidemic was said to have spread eastward from the Ostmark area of Poland

Russians Plan New 'Offensive War'

MOSCOW — (UP) — Russian communiques and dispatches, detailing brilliant successes all along the 1,000 mile front, indicated today that the momentum of the German retreat from Moscow was increasing and disclosed that Red army chiefs already were discusing a secret "new phase of offensive war."

The Russians recaptured the city of Klin, key point on the front northwest of Moscow, recaptured 50 villages in the Kursk sector south of Moscow and were engaged in a general advance in the Tula sector north of Kursk.

Radio Khaborovsk reported that Red army leaders were now meeting at Kuibyshev, discussing the "new phase" of the offensive.

(London newspapers quoted Stockholm advices that more than 100 German divisions, or more than 1,500,000 men, were withdrawing on a 1,000 mile front.

(A Daily Mail Stockholm dispatch asserted that the Germans were retreating "through blinding snow storms and bottomless drifts which during the week-end turned the whole eastern front into a white hell.")

The retreating Germans were abandoning increasing quantities of war material and their wounded as they fled before Russian troops pledged to exterminate them.

Finland Battling Russia With Gun At Her Back, Malabar Visitor Says

Wife Of Finnish Minister Urges British Aid

Although Finland is fighting beside Hitler against Russia, at least one Finnish representative—one who is visiting in the Mansfield area—believes that it is being done "with a gun at her head and another at her back."

She is Mrs. Peggy de Gripenberg, wife of George de Gripenberg who served as Finnish minister to England for the past 10 years, and she backs up her statement with lecture tours throughout the country in which she urges "all-out" aid for Britain.

Mrs. de Gripenberg is visiting Novelist Louis Bromfield at Malabar, en route between a lecture at Otterbein college yesterday and another at Fairport, O., tomorrow. She met the author while he resided in France and England.

Although her husband's country is now officially at war with England, Mrs. de Gripenberg still continues her efforts to obtain aid for the British.

"The Finns wish to be a republic as before and their greatest ambition is to be like the United States. All this will pass. Finland knows that no small country can live in peace unless Hitler is defeated."

Mrs. de Gripenberg was born in England, and did not spend very much time in Finland. She has accompanied her husband to several South American countries where he served before being assigned to England about 10 years ago.

About a year and a half ago, she came to this country to make a tour, thanking Americans for all the aid they gave Finland in its fight against Russia. Her home in England had been destroyed by bombs, as have three others the de Gripenberg family occupied.

Mrs. de Gripenberg is certain that the Finnish people want the British and Americans to beat the Axis powers. She feels certain that a Finnish-Russian peace will be signed before long.

MRS. PEGGY DE GRIPENBERG

The Finnish minister's wife served as an ambulance driver during the first World war. During this second war, she has returned to Red Cross work to aid the British and Finnish soldiers. During the first Finnish-Russian war, she flew to Finland from England with Red Cross supplies.

Mrs. de Gripenberg travels about the country, paying her own expenses and speaking for any British aid or Red Cross group wishing to sponsor her. She has spoken to hundreds of Americans, including Americanized Finns and many British sailors in American ports.

Along with her talks, Mrs. de Gripenberg shows motion pictures of the evacuation of Dunkerkque and other dramatic sequences from the war.

She has not heard from her husband for weeks. Following the declaration of war, she believes he went to Lisbon, Portugal. Mrs. de Gripenberg said that his sympathies were also with the Allied cause. Their daughter, Joan, 12, is attending school in Pennsylvania.

TEACHERS ASK SALARY BOOST

Heated Discussion Develops at Board Meeting; Action on Request Delayed.

the Teachers' association finance committee. Others who appeared before the board with him were Miss Helen Lorow, teacher at Carpenter school; Miss Anita Strauch, Johnny Appleseed Junior high school; Floyd Million, Senior high school, and J. H. Perrill

The discussion warmed up when Nixon wanted to know "how the board seems to raise money for everything else except teachers' salary increases and what steps have been taken recently to better the morale of teachers."

"You got what you asked for in the single-salary pay plan last spring, didn't you?" Supt. Miller asked.

"I didn't vote for that plan, and I understand some of the teachers didn't get what they asked for, either," Nixon retorted.

The single-salary plan, voted last May by the board at the request of the Teachers' association, provided the same pay for elementary teachers as those in high school if they have the same training and experience.

The plan does not call for any over-all salary increase in 1942, but it will boost total salaries $700 in 1943, $2 000 in 1944, $1,900 in 1945 and $2,200 in 1946. Teachers who are receiving less than the maximum will receive annual salary increments ranging from $25 to $50.

Miss Lorow asked the board why there is "so much of a gap between the pay principals and coaches receive and the salaries of some of the teachers."

H. W Arlin, president of the board, explained that coaches, particularly, are not highly paid in Mansfield, but they usually get more than the average teacher because they are in greater demand.

"I'm sure every member of this board would be tickled to adjust teachers' salaries upward if there was some means of doing it, but the schools have been running into deficits for several years and probably will again this year," Arlin said.

He suggested that the teachers make a study of the salary scale in other cities the size of Mansfield and report their findings to the board.

Supt. Miller pointed out that salaries and fixed charges take 85 6 per cent of the total school funds in Mansfield, leaving a comparatively small amount for other operating costs. The percentage is higher in Mansfield than in most Ohio cities, he said.

Salaries of the approximately 230 teachers and instructors in the city schools next year will amount to approximately $350,000.

Arlin reminded the teachers that the Westinghouse plant, where he is personnel director, has been forced to lay off hundreds of workers with no assurance of when they will be taken back.

"In view of that condition, you teachers are reasonably secure in that you get your pay regularly and know when you are going to work," he said.

As a "last resort," Nixon suggested that the present three-mill school levy be increased to four mills, but the board reminded him that the voters would have to do that and getting their approval now probably would be difficult.

Thank you

Taking Care Of Ailing Children

By GARRY C. MYERS, Ph.D.

Few children will entirely escape all diseases. One of the most trying problems of a mother is to manage the child from three to ten, whenever he has a slight illness or is convalescing.

Suppose the doctor orders your child to bed, or to remain in bed, but he wants to be up and moving about. Suppose he has never learned the alphabet of restraint or consideration for authority. Then the chances are that he will have his way. You won't have the heart, ten, to employ pysical force, and he is almost sure to be less cooperative than usual.

But how you suffer, as you beg and plead and argue with the child, all the while aware of your helplessness and distressed by the knowledge that staying out of bed is likely to prolong the child's illness, endangering his health, possibly his life.

Prepare For Next Time.

You do not need scolding; you have punishment enough. We hope you will succeed in getting the child to stay in bed when he should. But in any event, as soon as he has entirely recovered, work out a careful program to prepare him for better cooperation in the next possible emergency.

Let us prepare our children while they are well for the times when they are going to be sick. Frequently in this column I have stressed the importance to the child of his learning at an early age some basic inhibitions, as a means to help further his best conduct later for building in him good habits and attitudes of citizenship.

The child who has learned very early that there are some things also as a guarantee of happiness to him, he must not have and some things he must not do, and who by and by discovers also that there are a few things he will have to do; who, in short, has acquired respect for authority, having learned it from parents who rarely asserted it, and who proved day by day that they were always firm and just and sympathetic—such a child in an emeregncy will, with little or no emotion, adapt himself when authority needs to be exercised.

Depends on Training.

Here again the mother's success will depend on what she has done to cultivate cooperation in the child, to stimulate wide interests in him—habits of self-amusement by creative work, or by listening to stories. Fortunate then is the child who, from the time when he could handle crayons, scissors and paints, has spent many happy hours at making things; most fortunate any ill or convalescent child who has enjoyed being read to from the time he was less than two years old.

Anything we parents do with young children to cultivate healthy restraint, cooperation, and wide happy interests and creative skills of all sorts, bears rich dividends, not only for us but for the children in later years.

A chart giving desirable hours of sleep at various age levels may be had by writing me at 235 E. 45th St., N. Y. City, enclosing self-addressed envelope with a three-cent stamp on it.

Solving Parent Problems.

Q. Suppose the parent tells the child to punish the parents for the offense the child has committed?

A. In a few rare cases it might be effective, but as a rule not. As a rule, the offender only should pay the penalty for his wrong doing.

HOROSCOPE

For Wednesday, Dec. 17.

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

MOST propitious astral influences may prevail on this day, with the promise of the intervention of unexpected or unforeseen forces lending excellent assistance in developing or promoting projects or programs of major importance and broad scope. This may embrace the public welfare, or involve group, community or social campaigns. All will be accelerated under high pressure of benignant purpose. But subdue trends to excessive outlay or extravagance of a personal nature, since the social, emotional and domestic interests may be also most happily stimulated.

Those whose birthday it is may be assured a year of unusual progress, with strange or unexpected intervention in plans and projects of broad scope or major importance. All sorts of assistance and recognition arise from high places, with the public, society, financial interests or collective groups in friendly cooperation. But restrain temptations to extravagance or prodigality, particularly in the pursuit of pleasure, which may be inspired by social, domestic or romantic celebration.

A child born on this day should have many excellent characteristics and talents for notable success in life, probably in the public service.

"Pitfalls of Love"

(A Sequel to Marriage Meddlers)

By ADELE GARRISON

Father wants you to see Redfield later in the day," I told Mary, "and he wants me to talk to Noel. But neither of those tasks is the first on his list."

"No?" she answered, her eyebrows supplying an additional question mark. But she added nothing to her first word, although I guessed that her curiosity and anxiety were nearly at the bursting point, and I hastened to relieve them.

"He wants you to tax your memory some more about Marion," I said. "And I have much to tell you about happenings at the Underwoods, but it can wait till I tell you over the breakfast table. My tale is exciting, but it don't spoil your breakfast. So please put in your order as soon as possible."

"Luncheon for you, too," she said firmly, taking up a pencil and a sheet of hotel stationery. "What's your order?"

Madge Orders Tea.

"My dear child!" I expostulated. "I've done nothing but eat and dring innumerable cups of coffee all the morning. "Well"—with a remembrance of the hectic happenings at the Underwood house—"there may have been a few other activities."

"I'll warrant that," Mary interrupted emphatically.

"But the sad fact remains," I went on, "that I could not swallow a morsel of food. You may order me a pot of strong tea, if you will, to keep you company at your meal, and because I can use the stimulant presently."

"When you talk to Noel," she commented shrewdly.

"Exactly," I told her. "But, remember, not even a cracker in the food line."

"As you will," she retorted with a resigned gesture and walking to the telephone she asked for room service.

"Mrs. Veritzen," she said. "But I'm having breakfast in Mrs. Graham's apartment, Number 1239. Bring me my usual order, these papers—she named them—and an extra pot of strong tea on the side—the brew I always order. Right away, please."

Hasty Toilet.

She hung up the receiver and made a dash for her bedroom.

"I'll postpone my shower till later in the afternoon," she said, "but I must get into something a little less flamboyant, and reduce this hair to order, to say nothing of washing my face and brushing my teeth."

She was back in the room in less than five minutes, her hair carefully coiffed, her skin glowing, and her body becomingly clothed in a flowing zipper housecoat with Chinese flower embroidery. Brightly bordered socks and slippers to match her gown completed her costume. Next she swiftly moved books and papers from a table by the window and spread a lace cloth upon it.

"I like my own breakfast cloth," she said.

"So do I, when I can get it," I agreed. Then she pulled out a chair for me, and when she had put me into it, sat down herself on the opposite side of the table.

Madge Starts Her Story.

"Now," she said, "don't you think you can begin your story."

"There is no reason why I cannot," I said. "I didn't ask you to order breakfast because I thought you couldn't endure my news without strengthening food. I simply wanted to save all the time possible."

"Then — please — shoot," she said, and I began the story of what had happened at the Underwood home, from the time my father and I arrived there to find Lillian in a drug-induced slumber, watched by her husband and the nurse, Miss Whitlock.

I told her of the gangsters who had invaded the basement, of their capture, with the consequent wounding of Harry Underwood, and of the queer telegram which had come for Lillian from the men holding Marion.

Room service served the breakfast between chapters, as it were for of course I changed to inconsequent chatter while the man was in the room. When he had gone Mary put a pertinent question.

"Something Blue."

"But why did Aunt Lillian go to that restaurant in the first place?" she asked.

I told her of the letter from Marion to Lillian, which Miss Whitlock had observed, of my discovery of the place in which the frantic mother had hidden it, and of the message which Marion had begged her mother to send to Mary.

"Poor darling baby!" Mary said with horror in her voice. "Getting through to me is the only chance she has of letting anybody know where she is and both Ronald and her mother gum up the game by holding the letters incommunicado!"

"That's past history now, Mary," I said impatiently. "The important thing now is to know if there's any special significance in that reference to the 'something blue' she asks you to send her for her wedding."

Hard Mouth Lines Are Tattletales

By MME. QUI VIVE

She was a tall, gaunt, severe-looking woman. Her eyes bored through you. You wondered if she ever cooked up a nice, beaming smile, or if a little child ever put his arms around her neck and kissed her. There was a hard look around her mouth, as if nothing in the world quite suited her. And she carried that terrible holier-than thou expression.

The Young Thing whispered: "I can't bear to look at her. Women should be soft and tender. She has a machine gun face, and I'm afraid of her. I couldn't bear to live in the same house with her. I'd get so refrigerated you could break me up in little pieces." Well! Well! How would that eminently respectable perfectionist like to hear that. Perhaps if she were not so good she would be better.

Swinburne wrote about a "sweet, red, splendid kissing mouth." I think it should be the ambition of every girl to cultivate one. Goodness knows they're red enough these days, swished over with the brilliant lipstick, but if they are to be sweet and splendid, they must be smiling. There's nothing sweet about a mouth that looks as hard as nails. And you see plenty of them.

Mouths are pretty when on social parade, when the party is on. But look at some of them along the buy-ways. Shoppers hurrying: faces tense.

Faces don't stay the same through the years. They are ever in the making or the unmaking. Some get sweeter with age, some go sour. All depends upon what goes on in the mind and the heart. Living beautifully is one way of keeping beautiful. Nobody can have the face of an angel and the character of a rattlesnake. That combination can't team up.

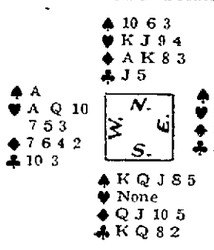
The woman who has the habit of boiling with anger acquires a hard mouth. Teeth clinched, chin drawn down, facial muscles at a tension. In time the expression leaves a mark. Burrows appear. Tissues soften from the strain. The face becomes cold and calculating. That's bad.

The discontented mouth isn't pretty, either. It advertises martyrdom, self-pity, selfishness. It is a cowardly face. It makes the atmosphere of the home cloudy.

The small fibers around the mouth are numerous and delicate. Draw down the lip corners for years and the droop becomes a fixture. If this damage has been done, a woman must mind her facial manners. She can give herself a facelift if she will smile often enough. Smiling strengthens the muscles.

Local treatment is helpful. Anoint the finger tips with a heavy cream. Place the first finger in the center of the upper lip, thumb at one end of the lip, second finger at the other. Keep the first finger stationary, draw up the lip into a Cupid's bow. Five minutes of this night and morning. Don't underrate the value of massage. It works.

Tomorrow's Problem.



(Dealer: South. East-West vulnerable.)

If South opens this deal with 1-Spade, West bids 2-Hearts, North doubles and East passes, what should South do?

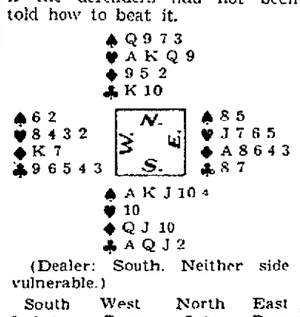
BARCLAY ON BRIDGE

By Shepard Barclay

"The Authority on Authorities"

DON'T TELL TOO MUCH

Many a time the strong pair bids its hands in such a way that the opponents receive more information than they should. They are told a lot of things which help them in the defense of the hand—information which is overwhelmingly more valuable to them than to the holders of the big cards. If they are wise and pay heed to what they learn, they can ruin a contract which would have been easy to make if the defenders had not been told how to beat it.



(Dealer: South. Neither side vulnerable.)

South	West	North	East
1. 1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
2 1 ♠	Pass	3 ♥	Pass
4 ♣	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
4 NT	Pass	5 ♦	Pass
5 ♠
3 1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♣	Pass	4 ♥	Pass

There was the bidding at three tables of a duplicate game. At No. 1, the defenders had no superfluous information about the situation, so West led the heart 2 and South made 6-Spades without any trouble, for a tie at top score with one other pair.

Bottom score went to the North-South pair at No. 2, where West knew all about the situation, including the fact that the Blackwood response showed South there were not enough aces on the side to bid slam. So west led his diamond K, then the 7 to the A, and ruffed the diamond return, setting the contract. Practically the same thing happened at No. 3, except that the three tricks by the defenders were not enough to set 4-Spades.

The pair tied with the No. 1 North-South combination for top did it by deliberate misinformation. After South's 1-Spade, North forced with a fake 3-Diamonds, and they wound up in 6-Spades, made because there was no diamond lead.

It shall be prima facie lawful for the operator of a motor vehicle or bus to operate the same at a speed not exceeding the following:

20 miles per hour when passing a school building or the grounds thereof during school recess and while children are going to or leaving school, during the opening or closing hours, and when appropriate signs giving notice thereof are erected.

Bad Coughs Yield Quickly To This Home Mixture

Surprisingly Quick Relief. No Cooking. Saves Money.

Here's a medicine for coughs due to colds, that you mix in your own kitchen. It's so easy to prepare that a child could do it, but it's so effective that, once tried, you'll never again be without it in your home.

Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments, until dissolved. No cooking needed — no trouble at all.

Then get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, put it into a pint bottle, and add your syrup. This gives you a full pint—a family supply—of very wonderful cough syrup. It's thrifty, too—about four times as much for your money. And children take it willingly, because it tastes so good.

This home mixture takes right hold of a cough in a way that's surprising. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and helps clear the air passages. Eases the soreness, and lets you rest at night.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, a most reliable agent for soothing throat and bronchial membranes. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

Predicts Rugs Of The Future Will Be Moth-Proof

CORVALLIS, Ore.—(INS)—Rugs that are moth-proof, stockings that will wear a year, dustproof and spotproof and straw hats that will not fade in the sun or melt in rain.

These are just a few of the developments to be expected through chemistry in the next few years, according to Lucy Lane, clothing and textile expert at Oregon State college.

Pointing to the ever increasing list of articles in everyday use at present through the wizardry of chemists, Miss Lane predicted an even more startling future.

For example, Miss Lane declared there is a chemical textile now being manufactured called "Fortisan," the strongest fiber the world has ever seen. The entire output of this amazing fabric is being used by the government for parachutes at present, but Miss Lane predicted a "revolution" in women's clothing once the fabric is used domestically.

Santa and the WHITE ROSE

by Sigrid Arne

(THE STORY SO FAR: Carl, a peasant's son, is trying to find a witch that is burning the crops. King Harald has asked a magic pipe, made by Santa, to help him.)

AP Feature Service

In a flash he had the witch's ankles tightly tied.

CHAPTER FOURTEEN
CARL CAPTURES THE WITCH

KING HARALD had no sooner spoken to his pipe than one of the little wooden figures carved on the bowl stepped out onto his hand. It was the figure of the farmer.

He walked across the King's hand and said, "I remember that witch and what the farmers did to her a hundred years ago. But it takes a brave man."

"Tell me," said the King.

"In the day time she sleeps in a bat's nest," said the tiny farmer. "If some one can bind her ankles with a green wheat leaf she will do what she is told when she wakes. But the man must beware. She sleeps lightly, and if she wakes and looks into his eyes before the wheat is tied the man will be blind.

"We must hurry to send out that news," said the King. "Some one can catch Carl. He must be deep into the next kingdom by now."

In half an hour a hundred of the King's soldiers were on their way. They had been told to cover every road leading from Harald's kingdom into the next realm and to bring the news to Carl.

They didn't find him. But they all finally arrived at the castle where the Princess Hildur lived with her father and mother, the King and Queen of the Kingdom of the Wide Rivers. They told their story to the King.

AT THAT very moment Carl was riding into the castle gates after he had failed to shoot the witch. He was delighted with the story of the wheat leaf. But Carl seemed so young the King was reluctant to send him in pursuit of the witch. So he chose an older man, named Helmer. Carl was disappointed, but he waited to see what Helmer's adventures would be. By sunset Helmer returned. He had tried, but he was blind.

Then the King turned to Carl and said, "My friend, King Harald cherishes you. But since you still wish to try your luck I shall consent because this disaster can harm not only us but King Harald."

"I will succeed," said Carl.

He planned to go alone, but Santa insisted on going with him. They rode back to the burning wheat fields, and there they met a group or excited farmers who volunteered to point out the barn where the witch was thought to sleep in a bat's nest.

When the farmers were gone Santa whispered to Carl, "It's plain you can't do what the last man did. I have an idea. I have a small pipe which plays very sweet tunes. When we find the witch asleep I'll play on the pipe, and she may drop off into a very heavy sleep. Then your task will be easier."

"Fine!" said Carl.

LONG after the stars had come up Carl and Santa crept into the barn's loft and found the nest in which the little witch was sleeping. Santa began to play tunes on his pipe, so sweetly that dozens of night butterflies flew in and danced about his head. The tiny witch stirred in her sleep, smiled, and then snuggled down to a very deep sleep.

Carl watched, and when he saw that, he took a green wheat leaf from his pocket, fashioned it into a slip-knot, and in a flash he had it tied tightly about the witch's ankles.

That waked the witch. She tried to jump to her feet, but she stumbled. Then she hung her head and said, "Lead me."

But Carl wanted to be sure she wasn't acting. He had closed his eyes tightly when she wakened, and he kept them closed, but he said, sharply, "Take off your shoes." He heard her rustle around and take them off. Then he said, "Now put them on again." He heard her grumble as she obeyed. Then he felt her feet. The shoes were on. So he opened his eyes, chuckled, picked her up, and put her in his pocket. He and Santa climbed down out of the barn loft and started back to the castle with the witch.

TOMORROW: The second witch appears.

GEN. JOHNSON: Stands Pat of Ohio BUC Removal Action

By GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON

WASHINGTON—I have been shocked by an apparent lassitude and complacency that still seems to govern some of our key people in industry and in government, even in the armed forces and emergency agencies. There certainly must be no panic but, just as certainly, this is no picnic. The sooner we realize the magnitude of the job the sooner we will get it done.

The time for that realization is now. In facing an unpleasant task, we are too often inclined to do just what we think we have to do, and no more. A lot of us haven't begun to catch on to what we have to do.

One manufacturer, patting his pounch complacently, said only yesterday: "Well, our firm, at least is ahead of schedule on our war contracts." Ahead of schedule! We can't be ahead of schedule. This poor deluded boob probably meant that he was ahead of a schedule set many months ago by some business-as-usual OPM'er or by some procurement officer struggling in the tortuous throes of penny-pinching peace-time procurement procedures. But that cannot and must not be his schedule now.

Doesn't he realize what has happened since that schedule was set? Doesn't he remember Sunday, Dec. 7?

This whole country is well behind schedule We can and will catch up. But don't let's kid ourselves. We are at war, bloody war on two fronts. On one front we are confronted with the strongest military and naval power in Asia and on the other with the strongest military power in the whole world. These powers have been arming "all-out" for years—we have not really started yet. How on earth can anyone say we—or any part of us—are ahead of schedule?

Early last week Judge Patterson, our able under secretary of war, ordered the five big munitions industries—the manufacturers of ships, planes, tanks, guns and ammunition—to go on a 24-hour-day, 7-day week. For every day since 1933 (when Hitler started to arm) that we have not been producing at that rate we are just that many days behind schedule.

And another thing, I have heard government officials say, since last Sunday, "Oh! We would like to do this or that but the department's policy established March 1925 or the comptroller General's ruling of May 1921 won't let us."

Policies! Rulings! Regulations! The government must remove the sludge from its own engine before it will get very far in needling the rest of the people. Bureaucracy ruined France. It must not ruin us.

I wrote a piece recently on the Smith bill regulating stoppages of production due to labor disputes. It is unthinkable, now that war has been declared, that labor will not control itself to the extent necessary to abolish all such stoppages of war production. By the time that piece was printed it was out of date. But that's not all that's out of date. Complacency, peace-time policies and procedures, endless conferences and discussions about what we ought to do and how to do it, must give way to immediate and unceasing action.

All considerations political, social or otherwise that have so far prevented us from organizing ourselves to this end must now give way to one dominating purpose—the immediate building of the most efficient, most powerful, and best integrated industrial, military and naval machine that the world has ever dreamed of—even in the wildest imaginings of H. G. Wells.

Mansfield police were convinced today that if the man they arrested for intoxication on North Diamond street last night could have "made connections" he would have been "plenty burned up" about the whole thing. Police found him staggering along the sidewalk, waving a brand-new electric iron. They booked him for intoxication but are still puzzling about where he got hold of the electric iron. They quickly dismissed the theory that he was a "canned heater."

Mansfield is represented through one of its artists in a new book, "The New Art Education," authored by Ralph M. Pearson of Nyack, N. Y. Alice Buscher Twitchell, 150 West First street, a comparative newcomer to the city, is mentioned among the Cleveland School of Art students who have contributed outstanding work to the field of art either in painting or schulpture, and the book carries numerous illustrations of her sculptured portrait heads and figures.

Mansfield Christmas cheer suffered a partial blackout last night. A short circuit in a string of Christmas lights decorating the streets near Fourth and Diamond put the lights out of commission for a short while. Mansfield firemen were called when the decorations began smoking. They quickly removed the danger of a fire. Ohio Public Service workers replaced the damaged string of lights.

Those "motorist-aid" barrels which are placed at the edge of highways in some parts of the state to permit the sanding and salting of highways during sudden storms are giving Charles H. Hebel, city street superintendent, a lot of trouble. Hebel is experimenting as to the best mixture for the purpose. If he uses calcium chloride mixed with sand, the chloride melts on the warmer days and cakes. At present, Hebel has decided upon a rock salt-and-sand mixture which he believes will solve the problem. Other city workers are trying to get Hebel to adopt a glass sand, which is used by Michigan state highway workers.

U. S. REFUSES TO ALTER ITS OUSTER ORDER

Holds Cincinnati Manager Violated Provisions of Hatch Act.

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON—The civil service commission refused today to rescind a decision ordering the removal of Harry J. Patterson as manager of the Cincinnati office of the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

A motion to reopen the case also was overruled by the commission, which demanded Patterson's dismissal on the ground he violated the Hatch act prohibiting pernicious political activities by persons paid wholly or in part by the federal government.

The motion was filed by State Attorney General Thomas J. Herbert after a hearing at which he said he wanted to present a letter from a former employe of the office taking blame for distributing political campaign cards.

The commission, which issued its original ouster order Oct. 10, said Herbert had offered no specific evidence that would change the decision. Patterson was allowed 30 days from today in which to appeal the case to the courts.

The Patterson case, first of its kind to come before the commission, aroused national interest, especially in the light of Gov. John W. Bricker's charge before the Patterson order was issued that the investigation was a prelude to federalization of state benefit systems by discrediting their administration by the states.

H. C. Atkinson, Ohio BUC administrator, has said that the state would pay Patterson's salary in event the ouster stands because state officials do not consider that Patterson violated the Hatch act.

Herbert contended at a Washington hearing Dec. 5 that civil service commission attorneys suppressed evidence and that false evidence was offered during the inquiry. The decision against Patterson was based on a strained and technical interpretation of the act, Herbert declared.

Commission attorneys countered that evidence showed Patterson solicited political campaign contributions from civil service employes under his supervision.

BROADWAY

—By Dorothy Kilgallen

Speaking For Myself.

THERE is no getting away from it; you write about Broadway but you think of Honolulu. You stroll across Times Square, but you think of Manila. You listen to music in the night clubs, but your mind is hearing cannon on the seas.

Kilgallen

And this is not strange, because Broadway and Times Square and the people in the night clubs are keyed to the new high pitch of war.

The late spots have recovered some of the crowdedness and gaiety they lost on the first two nights of crisis, but there is only one conversation from Third Ave. to Tenth, from the Club 18 to the Copacabana, and that is war.

Who are the Dodgers? Who cares? How many wives has Tommy Manville? Who cares? Does Cary Grant love Barbara Hutton? What difference does it make? The era in which those items occupied our semi-solemn chit-chat in the cafes seems longer ago than yesterday or last week.

It seems an era ago. And it was.

Not that I think frivolity has vanished, or should. I think we had better have some frivolity, providing it is wholesome and not wasteful frivolity, or we will not be in much shape to meet the enemy when he comes. We will be a tense and haggard band, ill fit for combat, if we give up all the things that make life lighter in peacetime.

I think we should go to the movies and shop for Christmas and visit our friends as usual. I think those of us who have been going to night clubs should keep going to them, and those of us who have been playing a weekly bridge game with the neighbors should go on playing it.

Staying shut up in our homes like frightened moles is not going to help our morale or the morale of America. We must not develop a national agoraphobia.

The important thing is not what we stop doing because of the war, but what we start doing to help.

You can count on the show people to dig in at the first gun and do their part.

They have always been the first and the most frequent toilers for charity of any kind; the minute there is a call for help in this country or in China or in Britain you find Eddie Cantor and Kate Smith and Al Jolson and Gertie Lawrence and Jack Benny and George Jessel and Lily Pons racing from their own chores to do benefits, with all their hearts and all their efforts and all their talents.

They are the natural money-raisers, these cheer-makers, and that is why it is important that cheer remain a popular commodity in this land. You cannot make money selling tears and sackcloth and ashes and despair; you have to sell songs and laughter and bravery and unbounded hope.

So let us keep our entertainment, and let us keep on being a good audience for our entertainers. Remember that laughter is one of the things we are fighting to keep; it is what we have that our enemies have not.

That's why I hope there will be no blackout in the theater. I hope that Sophie Tucker will go on trying her gaudy strip-tease, and that little Pat Peardon will go on bewildering her elders in "Junior Miss" and that Gertie Lawrence will continue to bring the house down with "The Saga of Jenny."

STATE COUNCIL MEETS TODAY

Appointment of Co-ordinator To Direct Organization Expected at Session.

(By Associated Press)

Appointment of a co-ordinator to direct organization of local defense volunteer registration offices throughout Ohio will be considered today at the first meeting of the state defense council since America's declaration of war.

Courtney Burton, council executive director, declared all phases of the state's far-reaching civilian defense program would be discussed, including training of auxiliary police and firemen, nurses' aide corps, and protection from raids.

Gov. John W. Bricker, council chairman, called the meeting.

Preparations for the war emergency already are under way in many of the state's larger cities.

Columbus' city council appropriated $8,000 for purchase of 15 air raid sirens to be installed at fire stations in scattered districts and operated as a part of the police-fire telegraph communications system.

A 20-member municipal defense council was authorized at Sandusky with Leland Spore as coordinator.

Patterson field near Dayton was blacked out in a 10-minute test last night.

Approximately 8,500 employes of the Wright Aeronautical Corp. engine plant near Cincinnati voted to work a full eight-hour shift next Sunday and contribute their double-time payroll for the day, totaling more than $100,000, to President Roosevelt for benefit of the armed services.

W. H. G. KEGG RETIRING AFTER 38 YEARS AT LUMBERMENS CO.

Some men who lead busy lives don't quite know how they will occupy their time after they retire from active business life, but W. H. G. Kegg, secretary of the Lumbermens Mutual Insurance company for 38 years and prominent figure in Mansfield civic and business affairs for many years, eyes the future with as much enthusiasm as a young man tackling a new job.

"How will I fill my time? My problem," he said, "is how I'll find time to do all the things I want to do. There are a number of personal affairs I want to handle, and then Mrs. Kegg and I plan a travel vacation.

Charles H. Keating, president and manager of Lumbermens, announced that "with regret, the board of directors is accepting Mr. Kegg's request that it consider his retirement." The board adopted a resolution expressing appreciation for his long service to the company.

The retirement is effective at the end of this year.

Kegg literally grew up with the Lumbermens Mutual Insurance company. A Pennsylvania farmer's son, he came to Mansfield in 1890 as a youth when his father, who had been wounded in Civil war service, was forced to seek work less strenuous than farming.

The father went to work for a lumber company, and the son attended Mansfield Business college. His first job was as department store clerk, and he went from there to the Farmers National bank, predecessor of the present Farmers Savings and Trust company.

He was at the bank 10 years to the day, rising from the position of clerk to assistant cashier. Meanwhile, Lumbermens had been organized in 1895. As its name suggests, the company was formed to write insurance for the lumber trade, which felt it had been paying too high a rate for insurance.

E. S. Nail, a prominent lumberman who is still board chairman of the company, was chairman of a trade committee which studied the insurance subject. He organized the company, and in July, 1903, when Kegg accepted an offer to join the insurance firm, it occupied only two small rooms in the Dickson building.

The company had only five employes, was licensed to operate only in Ohio, and had total assets of $124,615.

Today Lumbermens has its own office building with 20,000 square feet of floor space, located on a 20-acre plot known as Lumbermens Heights, adjacent to Westbrook Country club.

Soon after joining the company, Kegg was appointed secretary, and he has held that post for more than 38 years.

He married the former Maie Blanchard of Mansfield. The couple has five daughters, Mrs. R. M. Bushnell of Mansfield, Mrs. Ida K. Nall of Riverside, Conn., Mrs. L. R. Price, Farien, Conn., and the Misses Janet and Wilma Kegg, of New York City. A son, William Eugene, died in 1931. The family residence is at 677 Maple street.

HEARS SENTENCE

Publisher Fined $2,500, Gets 18 Months In Fraud Case.

Carlo M. Flumiani, president of a New York publishing company, convicted last week of having defrauded a youthful Mansfield author and hundreds of other writers, today had been fined $2,500 and sentenced to 18 months in prison.

Flumiani was charged by the federal government with having mulcted hundreds of authors including Bennie Contra, 91 West Sixth street, of thousands of dollars which they paid to have their works published.

Fortuny's Publishers, Inc., which Flumiani headed, will also be assessed a fine on Dec. 15. When sentenced Flumiani, graduate of an Italian university, expressed the belief that the United States was "a fine country, full of persons who think they can write."

Contra was but one of many writers who sent manuscripts to the New York publisher and paid installments to have them published. He was to receive 400 printed copies and a share of future royalties for the payment of $400 in installments. The Mansfield youth paid $275, then stopped after learning that the company was being prosecuted for fraud.

Twitted When He Built Shelter, Now They Want Seats

CANTON—(U.P.)—Friends twitted Harry Dourm when he began building a bomb-proof shelter in his back yard several weeks ago.

"Now they're begging for seats in it," Dourm said today.

His shelter is sunk 15 feet underground. It has benches to accommodate 50 persons. Above that room, but still underground, is a storage room with a ceiling-high safe in which he has stored personal belongings.

At ground level is a frame structure connecting with his dwelling. Ramps lead to the lower levels.

Dourm designed the shelter and built it himself, except for help in placing steel beams for the roof and walls. The beams are covered with an 8-inch concrete layer.

The Tygers go in the doghouse this week — the Bulldoghouse.

And dope to date doesn't indicate they'll do much good in the canine castle. So if they escape from the doghouse with a few of their claws left, don't go putting them back in the doghouse when they get back.

To the uninitiate, this is merely a roundhouse way of saying that Mansfield high's bucketballers will go to Canton Friday night for a game with McKinley.

The old podger's dogs may be barking, but he isn't yap-happy yet.

"If you think Newark's one of the best high school teams in the state, what do you think of those Canton McKinley's?"

That was Paul Snyder talking, after returning from a scouting trip on which he'd seen the McKinley Bulldogs batter Cleveland John Marshall 60 to 36.

Well, I'd heard that that Bulldoghouse was a powerhouse this winter, so my mumbled response was entirely unintelligible, and served only to keep the conversation alive.

"They just made 77 per cent of their shots in the first quarter, and 50 per cent in the second," Snyder exploded, and even over the telephone I knew his optics were popping. Poptics they were, I was sure.

* * *

"That John Marshall team wasn't bad," Snyder continued. "They had one guy six feet, seven, another 6-3, and another 6-2. The other two were just little boys, six feet even on the dot."

"So you know those McKinleys had a tough enough way to go to pile up those 60 points while Marshall was collecting 36. Ninety-six points in 32 minutes. That's piling up points."

Snyder could have added that the McKinley total was chalked up without the aid of Aaron Simms, offensive star, declared temporarily ineligible because of classroom difficulties.

Simms, who'll probably be back in the lineup when the Tygers invade the doghouse, wasn't the only Bulldog to feel the wrath of the McKinley faculty last week.

A reserve game, scheduled as a preliminary attraction, had to be called off at the last minute when it was discovered that eight members of the reserve squad were ineligible because of classroom deficiencies.

There's probably some sort of moral to be gained from this sad story but it's lost for the nonce in the realization that all the boys will probably be eligible for battle against Coach Vere Smith's Tyger tots Friday night.

* * *

Location of the doghouse in which the Tygers will perform isn't certain yet. McKinley played Marshall in the small McKinley gym before 900 fans, but hopes to move the Mansfield game to a larger kennel.

Jenkens Set for Angott Go

Trys To Eat Cake and Come Back For 2nd Try.

By LAWTON CARVER

NEW YORK —(INS)— Followers of the pugilistic industry around here have been wondering of late whether Lew Jenkins has burnt himself out as a fighter by pursuing his avocation as one of the town's most playful play-boys, and it seems likely that all questions will be answered promptly and with a degree of finality on Friday night. Jenkins is going to attempt to prove that you can eat your cake and come back for a second helping.

* * *

He tangles this time with Sammy Angott for the undisputed lightweight championship of the world. The latter is a tough, rugged fellow out of the Pennsylvania mining country and is sufficiently formidable to be recognized by the National Boxing association as the lightweight titleholder. What's more he is going to be in perfect condition.

* * *

Jenkins used to be pretty tough himself, when he first got going around here on a streak that led to his eventually becoming the New York commission champion, and he punched so hard that the ringsiders winced when he landed. But what has he got left? Can he still go as he did when he first came out of Texas? He never was a candidate at his best for a place among the super-greats of the ring, but when he was hungry and vicious and in shape he was scarcely a set-up.

He insists he will be in condition for this fight. I doubt that, although, of course, physical condition is a relative proposition. If he means he will be in finer trim than a fellow making the boob traps at 3 a. m., no one will argue with him. But he won't be in as good shape as, say, Joe Louis going to bat.

Jenkins probably knows this only too well and if he doesn't he is the only one not in on what no longer is a secret. The odds are 7 to 5 on Angott and would be longer but for Jenkins' punch in the early rounds. After five or six rounds Angott becomes a downright pest to his opponent with his jumping around and his body-pelting, so Jenkins had better get him early, if at all. This one is for 15 rounds, which is a long, weary road when you're a little tired even before you start.

Regardless of how the fight may go and even if Jenkins is as bad as he has been in some of his starts, the encounter will not be without importance due to the title angle involved. One or the other—Angott or Jenkins—will leave the ring as the first undisputed 135-pound champion since the reign of Lou Ambers.

Durham Gets Rose Bowl

Governor Assures Army of Military Safety.

DURHAM, N. C. —(AP)— The scene of football's oldest and biggest extravaganza—the Rose Bowl game—shifted cross country today to the land of tobacco.

War cancelled the big New Year day contest between Duke university and Oregon State as far as the huge Rose Bowl stadium, the tournament of roses and Pasadena are concerned.

There was little doubt that the game would be played here Jan. 1. Gov. J. M. Broughton of North Carolina personally intervened and assured Washington officials that the game would not interfere with the state's defense program. He then announced, "I think the army will give its permission."

Military expediency demanded blackout of the game on the California coast. Sixty thousand tickets had been sold for approximately $264,000. The money will be refunded by individual check with Oregon State assuming the postage bill. Rose Bowl officials hoped to recover at Durham $30,000 already spent on game preliminaries.

Fast on the heels of the announcement that the game would be played here as an official Rose Bowl engagement, came word from civic leaders that a celebration, though not as elaborate as the tournament of roses at Pasadena, was in the making.

Duke stadium will seat more than 50,000 persons and tickets will sell for $1.40 apiece. The tournament of roses will get its cut and probably determine how the remainder will be divided.

Gomez, Lee Top Pitchers

Feller Drops From First To Sixth Place In Ratings.

NEW YORK—(U P)—A pair of southpaws, Vernon Gomez of the Yankees and Thornton Lee of the White Sox, carried off the two big pitching prizes in the American league last season, according to the official averages released today.

Gomez, making a comeback after almost being shunted off the Yankee bandwagon during the winter, led the league in percentage with 15 victories and five defeats for a mark of .750.

Lee led the league in earned runs and there was nothing flukey about his triumph. The veteran White Sox lefty allowed only 2.37 earned runs per game in 300 innings in 35 games.

Despite the fact that Bob Feller, Cleveland fireballer, dropped from first to sixth among the regular starters in earned runs, he enjoyed a highly successful season. Feller led in total victories, with 25, most strikeouts, 260; most shutouts, six, most innings pitched, 343; and faced the most batters, 1,254. He came the closest to a no-hitter with a one-hitter. He also hurled two three-hitters and five four-hitters. His earned run average was 3.15 as compared to 6.62 a year ago.

Art Hilborn was in the groove again last night, setting the scoring pace with a 686 total on games of 231-223-232, while Grohol had 654, and Dalton 614.

Moore toppled the maples for high game of 253.

Bucyrus Keglers Have Hot Streak

"Rusty" McBride paced the Liederkranz with 695, and gave the fans a thrill in the second game when he turned in eight straight strikes, only to leave the 10-pin standing on a good hit in the ninth. Duke Weber had 627 and Harold Selby 601.

In another N. C. O. match Avalon Night club defeated the Eagles 2-1.

Rex Billiards scored a 137-pin victory over a Liederkranz team Sunday, while Curing Room No. 2 won from Mill Room 2-1 in a Mansfield Tire league match. All these scores were turned in at The News-Journal too late for use in Monday's paper.

Tyger Gridders To Ride Donks

Football Stars Picked For Novel Cage Tilt.

Five Mansfield Tyger gridders will attempt to ride the donks in the donkey basketball game tomorrow night at the high school gym against a team of Downtown Coaches yet to be picked.

Bill Doolittle, Bill Pecht, Duke Weber, Lightnin' Jones and Ken Smith have volunteered to take a precarious perch on the donkeys' backs and attempt to outscore the D. C.'s in this novel game of bucketball.

Ned Brooks, head coach of the Downtown Coaches, has the job of lining up the rival quintet.

A regulation game between John Simpson and the high school reserves is booked at 7 o'clock, with the donkey tilt at 8.

City Cage League Returns To Court Wars This Evening

The City "A" Basketball league will march into its fourth night of play tonight at 7 o'clock at Mansfield Senior high school when another interesting three game program is booked.

In the first game the Yuncker Sports tangle with the Ohio Public Service team. Although the OPS club is still seeking its first victory, an interesting game should result. Yunckers will be attempting to get back on the victory path, since in their last league start they were vanquished by Westinghouse, thus relinquishing the league lead.

In the second game at 8 o'clock, the league leading Westinghouse Electrics attempt to notch their fourth straight victory of the current campaign.

They will be opposed by the Blue Goose Sohioans, always a title threat. If they can defeat the Westies in this game they will still have a chance of gaining first place in the first round of play. However if they are defeated, they will be eliminated from all title consideration in the first round.

The Westinghouse team has been showing all kinds of power this year, both offensively and defensively. They seem to be headed for the best season that they have enjoyed in a long time. This game should really prove to be a battle.

The third game will bring together the Athletic Supplies, defending champions, but at present in second place tie with Yuncker Sports, and the City News, who are after their second straight triumph. After losing their first two games, they were winners in their third game and will be gunning for their second straight win.

Northern Nips Denison

Wilmington, Kent State Also Win Cage Games.

(By Associated Press)

Ohio Northern took its place today among the six Ohio conference basketball squads victorious in their first league contests of the season.

Northern, paced by Lowell Shaffer's 21 points, defeated Denison University, 56-44, in a conference game at Ada last night.

Shaffer, senior forward from Forest, rang up ten field goals and a free shot to beat out Ed McFadden, Denison forward, by two points for the game's high scoring honors.

The lead see-sawed during the first 10 minutes but Northern led at the half, 27-17.

A Wilmington college rally fell one point short as the Quakers lost a 41-40 decision to the Morehead (Ky.) State Teachers college at Wilmington. Officials ruled that Sewell, substitute freshmen guard, stepped over the line in shooting what appeared to be the tying free throw.

Kent State's well-balanced team trimmed Bluffton 63-40 at Bluffton, with Mike Feduniak of Kent scoring 13 points for individual honors.

Heidelberg's Student Princes visited Adrian, Mich., and absorbed a 53-30 licking at the hands of Adrian college.

John Simpson Loses To Ontario

California Sports Cancelled

Racing, Pro Football and Bowl Games Curbed.

LOS ANGELES—(AP)—War cancelled California's rich winter sports program today. Here's what he won't see:

Jan. 1, Pasadena—Rose Bowl football game between Oregon State and Duke university, transferred to Durham, N. C.

Jan. 1, San Francisco—East-West all-star football game, to be transferred, possibly to New Orleans Jan. 3.

Jan. 4, Los Angeles—Pro bowl football game between National league champions and league all-stars, to be transferred, possibly to Chicago.

Dec. 31-March 14 — Santa Anita's 55-day winter race meeting cancelled.

March 20-late May—Bay Meadows race meeting, cancelled.

A sellout crowd of 90,000 annually jammed the Rose Bowl and 55,000 crowded into Kezar stadium, San Francisco, for the Shrine's East-West charity game. Seventy-five thousand seemed a conservative estimate for the pro bowl clash.

Santa Anita drew 47,000 fans last New Year day and 50,000 last March for the $100,000 handicap. More than $1,000,000 had been appropriated for purses this winter.

Cancelled also was the Tournament of Roses parade, an extravaganza of floral floats which drew crowds estimated at 1,500,000 New Year morning.

* * *

Crowds . . . jamming stadia and highways . . . in two of the west's vital defense areas . . . Los Angeles and San Francisco . . . that's why Lieut. Gen. John L. DeWitt commander of the fourth army, requested the cancellations.

Durham, home of the Dukes, quickly asked for, and got, the Rose game, oldest of all the bowl fixtures.

New Orleans, because of its warm climate, was reported to have the best chance for the East-West game, which would be put off to Jan. 3 because the city hosts the Sugar Bowl clash between Missouri and Fordham New Year day.

Chicago hoped to get at least one game, possibly the pro bowl.

About all California salvaged was four golf tournaments.

Martins Ferry Cage Team Starts Defense Of Crown

By JAMES EMERSON

COLUMBUS—(U.P.)—Coach Floyd Baker propelled his latest Martins Ferry basketball machine on a flying start today toward a difficult goal which only one other school has attained—consecutive state class A scholastic basketball championships.

Despite the long odds against successful completion of such a risky undertaking, the Purple Rider "fire wagon" is accorded the best chance of any titleholder in recent years of gaining a "double slam."

Dayton Stivers is the only school ever to capture the crown two years in a row. Stivers holds a record in this respect which probably never will be matched—two three-straight title teams, in 1919-20-21 and in 1928-29-30.

Baker's smartly-coached Martins Ferry club may make it two straight this winter. He has five boys, including two regulars, back from the offensive-minded gang which defeated Lakewood, 37 to 30, in the state finals last March.

The Ferry ace, of course, is big Lou (Chief) Groza, six-foot, three inch all-fourney center and all-Ohio football tackle this fall. He collected 17 points last Friday as Ferry opened the season by smothering Mingo, 65 to 19. Bill Young, a great halfback on the Riders' unbeaten gridiron team this fall, is the other returning regular.

Baker apparently has come up with some capable talent to replace the three regulars lost by graduation. Al Groza, a sophomore brother of Lou, and Bob Bowen, a senior, each caged 15 points in the Mingo debacle. Alex, by the way, is six feet, three inches, like his brother.

The current Ferry five displayed the same racehorse offense as its predecessor in swamping Mingo. They ran the score to 18 to 1 early in the contest. Two games away from home this week, with Shadyside tonight and with Tiltonsville Friday night, should give a better line on the club.

Glenford, the 1941 state class B champion, seems to have another winning club despite the loss of all-Ohio Dick Shrider. Coach Nolan Swackhamer's new team has won seven straight after dropping its season opener to Junction City. Although Glenford numbers Mt. Vernon, a class A outfit, among its victims, the Swackhamer crew has had some close scares. It took a free throw by John Hollister in the last 10 seconds to down Corning, 37 to 36, last week.

A checkup discloses that seven of the 16 class A state finalists of last March already have gone down to at least one defeat this season. On the other hand, Xenia Central, a semi-finalist in the state classic, has won four straight in the new campaign. Newark has captured three straight; Ashland, Middletown and Youngstown Rayen, two each, and Martins Ferry, Canton McKinley and Zanesville one each.

Massillon doesn't open its schedule until tonight against Akron Central.

The seven district champions with one or more losses so far are (won-lost in parentheses)—Bryan, Cincinnati Hughes, Lima Central (2-1); Toledo Libbey (1-1); Lakewood, Springfield Township (1-2); Portsmouth (0-1).

The casualties have been even heavier among the 16 class B finalists of last March. At least 10 have absorbed one or more setbacks to date. It should be noted, however, that most of the B schools do not engage in football and hence have been pounding the hardwoods two weeks to a month longer than the class A teams.

Berlin Township, in Delaware county, appears to have the best record, five straight triumphs, among the defending class B outfits.

But the top victory performance in the entire state at this early date appears to be 10 conquests in a row hung up by Washington Township in Scioto county. No. 10 was a 52 to 10 breeze over Barden last Friday.

Midvale, runnerup to Glenford last spring, has a 5-2 mark. Other 1941-42 records of class B finalists include Spring Valley, 7-1 (defeated by Xenia Central); Loudonville, 3-0; Marysville, 1-4; Cridersville, 6-1.

The one-man scoring "gangs" are on the loose, as usual. Forward Nelson of Washington Township has caged 256 points in 10 contests for a 25.6 average. Sylvester (Stretch) Goedde, Vaughnsville, has 105 points in four games, a 26.1 average. Wierwiller of New Knoxville netted 39 in one game when New Knoxville trimmed New Hampshire, 52 to 32, last week.

CHAPTER XVIII

Dennison watched Wige's face closely when he mentioned that salary offer. He saw at once that his figure was in excess of the stipend the bank clerk was receiving. Probably quite a little more. But something like stubbornness was in his expression and voice as he answered:

"I told you I hadn't been considering any change. I would be obliged to think it over a little."

"Perhaps I didn't make it clear that the position is permanent," Dennison suggested. "That is, as permanent as anything can be in this unusual world state. I have no reason to think you couldn't handle the job." Again that odd expression in the other man's eyes, a suggestion of suspicion almost. Dennison wondered what was holding him back. He was sure that Lenon wanted the job. But before the conversation could be carried further, Amanda thrust her head into the parolr.

"Excuse me," she apologized. "Charlie's gone to sleep in his chair, Wilbur, and he looks so uncomfortable. Will you take him upstairs for me? He doesn't want to wake up."

"Yes," Wige answered. "Will you excuse me just a minute?" he asked Dennison.

"Surely."

The hall door stood ajar and Dennison caught a glimpse of Wige on the stairway with an inert figure in his arms. No doubt it was the brother mentioned by Doctor Silverthorne. Perhaps that was a clue. When Wige re-entered the parlor Chester asked:

"Your brother?"

"Yes," Wige admitted. He added reluctantly: "He had infantile paralysis some years ago He gets around quite well, but it's hard for him to manage the stairs yet."

"That's tough. How old is your brother?"

"Nineteen." Then, almost aggressively: "Charlie has the brains of this family. He's remarkably clever with his hands and reads everything of a scientific sort he can find." An unwilling change crept into his voice with the last words and Chester caught it. But he could not know of the turmoil that possessed Wige during the moments Charlie's arm was about his neck. Or the something that caught at his throat when the younger boy looked up with a sleepy grin to mumble: "Good old scout, Wige. Thanks." Good old scout—good old—scout.

"Very fortunate that he's able to overcome his handicap to such an extent," Chester remarked. "And it is remarkable what medical science is doing for such cases today."

He was not prepared for the effect of his words. Wige jerked forward in his chair, face grim, his voice low, but steady.

"I'm going to take your job, Mr. Dennison. At that figure. I'm satisfied I can make good."

"Well, if you feel like trying it that will be a great help to me," Chester said. He thought he understood the reason for the sudden change. Wige relaxed and said in a flat tone:

"Mr. Higgins won't like it. I shall have to give him some notice."

"Assuredly! But you're free, white and twenty-one. I'd say the first of the month was fair enough."

"He won't think so," Wige observed.

"Oh, well. If the old gentleman acts too obstreperous, drop me a hint. I have several assorted clubs I can use on him if I have to you know. His isn't the only bank in these parts. But I dare say he'll be reasonable enough. And that gives me another idea. You observe banking hours I suppose?"

"Rather regularly."

"I have been working evenings pretty much at the office trying to keep myself in the clear. You might join me occasionally. I could get you in on some of the ground work, make you familiar with details and all that. Don't you think?"

"Yes, sir. I'll work as many evenings as you like. I'll be glad to."

"Thanks. You'll be paid for your time of course. If you are not busy tomorrow evening drop up. I'll be curious to see what shape you're in after your interview with Higgins."

"I'll be all right," Wige answered steadily. "And thank you very much, Mr. Dennison."

"I hope we're both lucky, Lennon. And I really must be shoving on."

"Who was that man?" Mrs. Lennon demanded when Wilbur appeared in the dining-room after seeing his guest to the door.

"That was Mr. Dennison. He's in charge here for that plane plant."

"What did he want?"

"Asked me to take a job with him."

"You didn't, I should hope!"

"Yes. I said I'd go." Wige was staring at the lamp on the table. "It's more money . . . quite a little more."

"Wilbur Lennon! Have you taken leave of your sense? What do you know about those people? Mr. Higgins will never in this world take you back if anything happens. Whatever would we do?"

At dawn Carol Delaine opened her eyes reluctantly at the sound of a gentle, but insistent tapping on her door.

"Yes . . . ?" she murmured drowsily. Her father's voice answered.

"Say, ducklet, I'm going down a little early today. Can I talk to you a minute?"

"Of course. Will you close my window for me?" She pulled the comforter closer under her chin and gave a little shiver, fully awake now. "What's the matter, Andy?"

"Nothing very serious." He came over to the bed and smiled down at her affectionately. "I probably won't be home to lunch. So I thought I'd better see you before I left. Were you planning to be home this evening? It's Tuesday," he reminded as an afterthought.

"I believe you're right." Carol looked up at him owlishly. "And tomorrow should be Wednesday."

"Even so. But that's no reason why a young man I know shouldn't come to his senses by then. But about tonight. My good friend Dennison's dropping around after supper . . . saw him last night. We are figuring on a little session of poker and need a fourth to make it interesting. Will you fill in?"

Carol's eyes widened.

"Your good friend?" she echoed wonderingly.

"Sure! Chet and I are like that." He held up two fingers close together.

"Chet . . ."

"Now don't be telling me, after all your visits with him, you never knew his name was Chester. I call him Chet for short. We can depend on you then? Chet'll be disappointed if you don't. I've been telling him how good you are."

"Oh . . . Why, yes. I guess so."

"Fine! I wonder if you can work on Casie for some sandwiches . . . something that would go with beer."

"I'll ask her. But, Andy, why are you going to work so early?"

"Oh, I want to get things cleaed away. I may go away myself tomorrow."

"You don't mean." Carol raised herself on one elbow. There was a startled expression on her face.

"Oh, no. I'm not off to Montreal or anything like that. Just a little business trip . . . two or three days at most. See you at supper. I'm riding as far as the shop with Amos."

Carol scrambled from her bed as the door closed, but her dark brows were puckered in a frown while dressing. The idea of Mr. Dennison coming to spend the evening brought a feeling of pleasurable anticipation if not a little thrill. He was different from any man she had known and he had made an effort to be very nice to her the last time they had talked—after he finished his self-conscious apologizing for what he had called his curiosity. That was still rather puzzling, and tonight he was coming as Andy's guest! He had said he wanted to make friends with Andy and he evidently had succeeded.

Later, Aunt Cassie proved unexpectedly amenable to the idea of refreshments. If Andre wanted beer, however, he would have to see to it himself. As a charter member of the Jericho W. C. T. U., Cassandra Steel would not so much as order beer by telephone. Good coffee would be more to the point, anyway.

Perhaps it was looking forward to the card party that made the afternoon seem unusually long to Carol. She was pleasantly surprised, even if instinctively on her guard, when Patty Garver dropped in for a chat. Patty had not mentioned the change in the Delaine fortunes to her friend more than to offer effusive congratulations which had earned nothing more than Carol's quiet thanks and a change of subject. Today she had the feeling that there might be something behind this call, but attempted to steer the talk through commonplace channels. Finally, Patty said:

"You know, darling, we've all been wondering when you were going away. And dying with envy," she finished with a gay laugh.

"Going away? But I'm not going anywhere, Patty. Not that I know of."

"You're not! Why, we've all been expecting you'd dash to New York or somewhere and buy oodles of new clothes for winter! It's the first thing I'd do if I were in your place. I'll bet you are, too!"

It was Carol's turn to laugh. "What in the world would I get oodles of new clothes for? To wear around the office?"

"But, darling! You're never going to keep this job! Everybody thinks you're just staying on until Doctor Silverthorne finds another girl. That seems silly, now that you've got a car and everything. You certainly are going to get out and have a good time, I should hope."

"I told Doctor I'd stay for a time," Carol suddenly looked thoughtfully.

"You are funny. You putter around here when you don't need a job, while."

"While what?"

"I wouldn't be catty for the world, darling, but there are so many of us girls here who've been looking for any kind of a job. This new factory isn't going to help us, I don't guess." Then she added a trifle self-consciously: "I was going to ask you to put in a good word for me here when you quit . . . if somebody hasn't beaten me to it already."

Carol regarded her friend so soberly that Patty burst out:

"I hope I didn't make you mad by saying that! I didn't, did I?"

"Of course not, Patty. I hadn't thought of it that way, I guess."

"All right. Don't forget your old pal if you do decide to quit any time. And speaking about the factory . . . I think Wige got the job Mr. Dennison was talking to you about. He never came near me. More tough luck."

"But Wige hasn't left the bank, Patty! I saw him there this morning when Doctor sent me over on an errand."

"I know. Maybe I'm letting cats out of the bag, but he's working nights up in Mr. Dennison's office. Everybody's got that figured out. Well, I hope it's true and I hope he gets a good raise . . . not that it makes so much difference now," she suggested archly. "Funny that you and old Wigie would both get a good break at the same time. Well, I must be trotting along, darling."

The pang of conscience that assailed Carol when Patty intimated that she was holding a job she didn't need, and that some girl did, was overshadowed for a moment by this news of Wige. Working evenings in Mr. Dennison's office did make it appear that he was breaking in on a new position. He must have been pretty sure that the change was to his advantage for he had always felt his place in the bank was secure and that he was lucky to have it at a time when jobs were hard to get.

Carol was generous enough to hope that it meant a raise, enough to make things a little easier at the Lennon home. And she supposed there could be chances for advancement in a big company like that. Wige's future no longer concerned her, but she would be glad to see him succeed for all that.

But there was her own situation to consider now. It was strange that it hadn't occurred to her to give some Jericho girl the salary she didn't need any longer. Queerest of all, she hadn't yet realized she wasn't dependent on it. She must ask Andy what he thought about it. He still was working as though his shop represented his entire income. But Andy was going away. She couldn't help wondering where and why.

However, all thoughts of the future vanished completely when the four card players gathered around Aunt Cassie's dining room table that evening. Mr. Dennison was in the gayest of spirits and it proved quite contagious, affecting even Aunt Cassie who bustled about in the role of hostess until the game started. Then she settled herself near the others with her knitting and listened attentively to all that was said.

GIFTS, CARDS SHOULD BE IN MAIL THIS WEEK

Postoffice Warns Mansfield They Must Be Mailed Soon To Insure Delivery.

Mansfield Christmas shoppers were warned today by local postal authorities to mail Yule cards and gifts this week to insure delivery before Christmas.

Assistant Postmaster W. T. Houston pointed out that there might be a shortage of trains available for the added volume of holiday mail this year, due to possible movement of government troops and supplies, according to railway officials. There has been no official confirmation of this as yet, however.

Only the use of the special delivery service will assure delivery of parcels and cards on Christmas day, if they are mailed far enough in advance, it was pointed out.

Houston especially urged Mansfielders to put return addresses on everything they mailed. "Last year we received over 1,000 cards with no postage affixed and no return addresses," he declared. When that happens we have to send them to the "dead letter" office.

"People often forget to put stamps on their cards when they are in a hurry," he explained, "but unless we have the return addresses of the senders, there's nothing we can do about it."

One of Mansfield's most common errors in mailing holiday gifts is in wrapping fragile articles, according to Houston. Postal authorities here insist that articles easily broken or crushed must be securely packed and wrapped to prevent damage to the contents in transit.

Glassware, crockery, or breakable toys must be individually wrapped in excelsior or like material before packing in more of the same material.

Books and framed pictures must have the edges well protected with stiff material and packed in wooden or strong double-faced, corrugated fiberboard boxes double-lined with the same material. All articles easily broken must be plainly marked "Fragile."

One other warning issued to Mansfielders regarding the mailing of greeting cards was: Do not mail Christmas cards in red, green, or other dark-colored envelopes or in very small envelopes."

HOLD YULE PARTY

SHELBY — Richland County Christian Endeavor union will hold a Christmas party at the Shenandoah Church of Christ at 8 p. m. today. A 10-cent gift exchange and Christmas entertainment will feature.

FARMERS GET $1.17 FOR WHEAT WHICH ONCE BROUGHT 36 CENTS

Farm prices are rising with Richland county farmers receiving as high as $1.17 a bushel for wheat, 47 cents per bushel for oats and 80 cents a bushel for shelled corn.

During the depression, J. O. Hanley of the Hanley Milling company said, farmers were given 36 cents per bushel for wheat, 12 cents for oats and 18 cents for corn.

Although today's prices are higher and still rising, they are not yet even close to prices paid during the first World war. In 1918—at the price peak—Hanley remembers paying $3.50 a bushel for wheat, $1.10 for oats and $1.80 for corn.

Today's prices are not the result of government pegging, Hanley claimed. Government loans are available on wheat at $1.08 per bushel, but with mills paying $1.17 such an offer is not having any effect on the market price.

In 1918 war was chief cause for the hike, W. B. Davis, manager of the Richland County Farm Bureau said.

Today, Davis explained, the higher prices are the result of increased domestic consumption rather than a foreign demand for U. S. farm products.

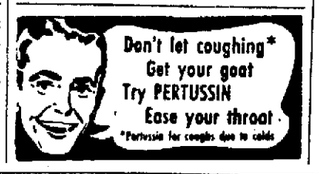
In the last war, he continued, European nations were making direct demands on the United States for farm products which created a scarcity and therefore hiked the price.

Meanwhile, Davis cautioned farmers against a too optimistic view of the situation.

"During the last war," he said, "over optimistic farmers expanded their farming interests far beyond their normal capacity to pay on the assumption that boom conditions would continue. Consequently when war demands slackened and prices fell they were in debt beyond their ability to pay and lost many of their holdings."

However, farmers can consolidate their holdings if a boom should result from the war and pay off their past debts, he continued.

The armadillo is found only in North and South America.



Iran is almost three times as large as France, yet on its arid land live only a third as many people.

STOCK EFFORT FOR RECOVERY STILL MOVING

Some Issues Catch Hold But Others Fail To Catch Swing.

(By Associated Press)

NEW YORK—Efforts to extend Monday's selective recovery were successful in parts of today's stock market but failed to take hold in others.

Early support was accorded U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Dow Chemical, Allied Chemical, Sears Roebuck, Woolworth, Boeing, Anaconda, Kennecott and Phelps Dodge.

General Motors and Chrysler were on the offside. Backward also were Goodyear, Goodrich, Du Pont, and Montgomery Ward.

Financial forces derived a little encouragement from the Federal Reserve summary disclosing loans to commerce, industry and agriculture by member banks in 101 cities for the week ended Dec. 10 increased $82,000,000 at $6,675,000,000. The total had declined $40,000,000 in the three preceding weeks.

RELAXES RULES

Board Will Permit Married Teachers To Finish Year.

The Mansfield board of education last night eased its restrictions on married women teachers to permit them to finish the school year in which they are married.

In the past, women who were married while teaching, were required to resign at the end of the semester.

Supt. W. L. Miller proposed the change, pointing out that a number of the teachers are being married now and to force them to quit immediately might cause a hardship in some cases.

The board extended the leave-of-absence granted Earl Reichert, an elementary teacher, last spring to permit him to serve out the duration of the war in the U. S. air corps. He is at Brooks Field, Texas.

The county high schools were granted permission to use the Senior high school gymnasium Feb. 26 and 28 for the county basketball tournament.
